EXPLANATION

THE object in view in preparing Corpus Juris Secundum has been twofold: First, to provide a complete encyclopedic treatment of the whole body of the law, which means that it must be based upon all the reported cases; Second, to present each title of the law in form and content most suitable as a means of practical reference for the Bench and Bar.

Corpus Juris Secundum is therefore a complete restatement of the entire body of American Law. The clear-cut and exhaustive propositions comprising the text are supported by all the authorities from the earliest times to date. The supporting case citations, conspicuously set out in the notes, point to all decisions handed down since the publication of Corpus Juris. When the searcher may wish to consult earlier authorities, a specific reference to Corpus Juris makes available all cases back to 1658.

Each title is preceded by a complete section analysis, greatly simplified to facilitate research. Where the scope of any section is such as to require it, a more minute analysis is found thereunder in its appropriate place within the title (see Abatement and Revival, Section 112). The convenience of this method—an innovation in encyclopedic writing—must immediately commend itself.

A concise black-letter summary, indicative of its scope, precedes the full treatment or statement of the law under each section. These introductory summaries, concise and free from interlineation of authorities, have proven of great convenience and value in legal research.

An index is found in the back of each volume covering the titles contained therein, thus providing another convenient means of ready access to the text and notes.

Corpus Juris Secundum is kept to date by means of annual cumulative pocket parts for each volume. This feature of supplementation which has proved so successful in modern digests and statutes conveniently, and with certainty, keeps each title constantly to date through current cases and new precedents.

Corpus Juris Secundum represents the combined products of the highest editorial talent and manufacturing skill. Its many excellent editorial features are fittingly accompanied by corresponding innovations and improvements in mechanical arrangement, typography, and design, which the publisher believes will commend themselves to the profession as representing a new standard in legal publications.

§ 1. Definition and Nature

A stipulation is an agreement between counsel with respect to business before a court, and is not one of the usual pleadings, but is a proceeding in the cause and as such is under the supervision of the court, and has been compared to, and distinguished from, a contract.

A stipulation, in the sense discussed in this title, is an agreement between counsel with respect to business before a court.¹ It is not one of the usual pleadings,² but is a proceeding in the cause and as such is under the supervision of the court,³ by means of its coercive power over the parties to the suit and their attorneys.⁴

"Contracts" compared and distinguished. While stipulations concerning pending causes in court have sometimes been described as "contracts,"⁵ or as "contracts made in the course of judicial proceedings,"⁶ and stipulations operating as concessions of some rights as a consideration for those secured have been said to have all the essential characteristics of mutual contracts,⁷ other decisions have stated without qualification that stipulations concerning a pending cause in courts are not contracts;⁸ and, as discussed in Contracts § 10, it is generally held that stipulations are obligations unlike ordinary contracts between parties not in court, and are not governed by the rules of law ordinarily applicable to contracts. Further, as discussed infra § 8, according to the weight of authority, stipulations need no consideration or mutuality to support them.

Not decree or consent decree. A stipulation is neither a decree⁹ nor a consent decree.¹⁰

§ 2. Favored by Courts

Courts look with favor on stipulations designed to simplify, shorten, or settle litigation and save costs, but it is not the duty of the court to require one of the litigants to stipulate with his adversary.

Whether the aid of the court is invoked by some summary method during the pendency of the cause, or by a resort to another independent action,¹¹

A stipulation made in open court and spread on the record "is a contract but made with more solemnity and better protection to the rights of the parties than an ordinary contract made out of court."—Fair Mercantile Co. v. Union-May-Stern Co., 221 S.W.2d 751, 755, 359 Mo. 385.

A stipulation made in presence of the court, touching subject matter of the litigation, is a contract with the court as well as with the adverse party, which the court is bound to enforce for protection of the latter.—De Santolo v. La Porte, 89 N.Y.S. 2d 114.

Stipulation of settlement entered into between parties to action constitutes contract between parties.—Kynin v. Grand Plaza Caterers, 265 N.Y.S. 614, 148 Misc. 156.

Sanctity of ordinary contract Stipulations having all characteristics as concessions of some rights as consideration for those secured are entitled to all sanctity of ordinary contract.—Thayer v. Federal Life Ins. Co., 258 N.W. 849, 217 Wis. 282—Illinois Steel Co. v. Warras, 123 N.W. 656, 141 Wis. 119.

Agreement held stipulation

Agreement between parties, designated as stipulation, which provided for settlement of action by payment of specified amount in installments and gave plaintiff right, on notice of default, to enter judgment, was not a fixed contract, but a stipulation over which court retained control.—Goldstein v. Goldsmith, 276 N.Y.S. 861, 243 App.Div. 268.

courts ordinarily look with favor on stipulations designed to simplify, shorten, or settle litigation and save costs to the parties,¹² and such stipulations should be encouraged by the courts rather than discouraged,¹³ and enforced by them unless good cause is shown to the contrary, as discussed infra § 31. However, it is not the duty or function of the trial court to require one of the parties to litigation to stipulate with his adversary,¹⁴ and in some types of suits, which are themselves looked on with disfavor by the courts, the court may view a stipulation entered therein with suspicion.¹⁵

§ 3. Form, Requisites, and Validity

While a stipulation need not follow any particular form, its terms must be definite and certain and it is essential that they be assented to by the parties or their representatives.

While a stipulation need not follow any particular form,¹⁶ its terms must be definite and certain in order to afford a proper basis for judicial decision,¹⁷ and it is essential that they be assented to by the parties or those representing them.¹⁸ Silence, under some circumstances, may be deemed assent, or, at least, may operate to bar a subsequent repudia-

Enforcement of stipulation in general see infra § 31.

Impleader; stipulation by original parties

Where plaintiff filed a contract suit against defendant who impleaded another and charged him with negligence, and plaintiff filed amended petition charging the cross defendant with negligence, plaintiff and defendant were within their rights in making stipulation on which the contract liability as between them was to be determined.—*Rose v. tion.¹⁹ The fact that the obligation of a stipulation is also involved in an independent agreement does not deprive a party of the privilege of asserting rights under the stipulation, even though such agreement is invalid.²⁰

Stipulation invalid in part. Where a stipulation is an entirety, and is invalid in part, the stipulation is void in toto.²¹

§ 4. — Oral or in Writing

- a. In general
- b. Exceptions to rule

a. In General

Generally, under statutes and rules of courts so providing, stipulations are required to be in writing and an oral stipulation is invalid, if disputed.

In the absence of some statute or rule of court providing to the contrary, any valid stipulation relating to a pending cause is enforceable.²² Nevertheless, it is usually required by statute or rule of court that stipulations with relation to a pending cause shall be in writing, and such requirement, subject to the exceptions discussed infra subsection b of this section, must be observed, and no oral stipulation with respect to a pending cause is valid and enforceable, if disputed,²³ at least unless it has been executed in whole or in part.²⁴

Purpose of, and reason for, rule. The rule requiring stipulations to be reduced to writing was adopted to prevent fraudulent claims of oral stipulations,²⁵ and to prevent disputes as to the existence and terms of agreements and to relieve the court of the necessity of determining such disputes,²⁶ which it has been said are often more perplexing than the case itself.²⁷ The time of the court should not be taken up in controversial matters of this character.²⁸

Stipulation read into record

Where stipulation was read into record at outset, counsel for one party could not disclaim it in absence of expression of dissent in positive terms, and mere silence or even a statement that he had no power to stipulate was insufficient as basis for disclaimer.—People ex rel. Loft, Inc., v. Sexton, 1 N.Y.S.2d 7, 165 Misc. 564.

Failure to return after service

Where stipulation served on defendant's attorney was not returned, any defects therein were waived.—Evans v. Cannon, 108 N.Y.S.2d 93, 279 App.Div. 667, reargument denied 109 N.Y.S.2d 187, 279 App.Div. 757.

20. Entry of support order on failure to make payments

Where parties had entered into a separation agreement and a separation action was pending, a stipulation made therein under the terms of which the parties consented to the entry ex parte of a certain form of order directing the husband to pay a specified amount to support the wife and child, pendente lite, on his failure to make payments for her support, was available to the wife independently as a matter of law when her husband failed to make such payments, even though the separation agreement was invalid.—Goldfarb v. Application of rule. The rule requiring stipulations to be reduced to writing has been applied to a wide variety of stipulations,²⁹ as for instance, stipulations relating to process;³⁰ stipulations to continue a cause³¹ or not to take judgment at a particular term or time;³² to discontinue a cause;³³ to dismiss a criminal prosecution;³⁴ or not to ask for a continuance;³⁵ stipulations with respect to pleadings³⁶ or evidence;³⁷ stipulations as to costs;³⁸ stipulations as to references;³⁹ stipulations as to trial⁴⁰ or new trial;⁴¹ stipulations as to judgments;⁴² stipulations as to executions⁴³ or as to appeals;⁴⁴ and stipulations to abide by the result of another action.⁴⁵

(1) In General

The rule requiring stipulations to be in writing is not without exception and does not apply to all agreements, but only to those relating to a pending cause, and by its terms may be limited to agreements between attorneys.

The rule requiring stipulations to be in writing is not without exceptions.⁴⁶ The rule does not apply to all agreements but only to those relating to a pending cause.⁴⁷ It has accordingly been held that an agreement for the settlement out of court of the controversy need not be in writing;⁴⁸ and such is the rule in respect of an agreement having to do with the payment of money out of the proceeds of a foreclosure sale which was independent of the suit in equity pending in court,⁴⁹ or an oral contract made with defendant's attorney by plaintiff before commencement of the suit.⁵⁰ It has also been held that the rule does not apply to a stipulation which, while made pendente lite, had its genesis in the contract sued on, and does not place any obligation on a party which did not already rest on him under the terms of the contract.⁵¹ So the operation of the rule is limited to the ordinary routine of practice, and has no application to agreements made to facilitate or guide officers in the execution of writs;⁵² and it does not apply to an agreement which may give rise to a cause of action in another suit, but only to the conduct and management of a cause before the court in which it is pending.⁵³

Operation limited to agreements between attorneys. Where the operation of the statute or rule of court is limited to agreements between attorneys, an agreement between a party and the attorney for the adverse party is not required to be in writing,⁵⁴ and it has been held that a stipulation by an attorney authorized by the party is the party's agreement and is enforceable although not in writing.⁵⁵

(2) Stipulations Made in Court

The rule requiring stipulations to be in writing does not apply to stipulations made in open court or before a master.

Statutes and court rules requiring stipulations to be in writing do not apply to stipulations made in open court⁵⁶ or before a master,⁵⁷ although it has been said to be the better practice to have them reduced to writing.⁵⁸ Where the agreement is made in the presence of the court, it has been said that "it is without the purpose or reason, if not without the letter, of the rule."⁵⁹ Stipulations made in open court have been very generally regarded as just as obligatory as though reduced to writing and executed with every legal formality.⁶⁰ On the other hand, it has been held that a stipulation made in the presence of or with the trial court, but not in open court, as where it is made in chambers, is required to be in writing.⁶¹

In presence of clerk. Under a statute so providing, a stipulation made in the presence of the clerk of the court may be enforced.⁶²

(3) Where Stipulation Admitted

The rule requiring stipulations to be in writing has no application to a stipulation which is admitted or is not disputed.

51. Stipulation for taking insured's deposition

In actions on fire policies obligating insured to submit to examination under oath, a first application by insurers for continuance, in substantial compliance with rule, properly verified and uncontroverted, alleging reliance by insurers on unperformed agreement with opposing counsel for the taking of insured's deposition, was improperly denied, notwithstanding rule that agreement between attorneys or parties will not be enforced unless in writing, since continuance would not enforce agreement but would merely leave the parties where they were prior to the agreement under the terms of the policies. —Piedmont Fire Ins. has no application to a stipulation which is admitted or is not disputed by the party against whom it is sought to be enforced;⁶³ and this is especially true where the agreement has been acted on by one of the parties.⁶⁴ Where the facts relied on by the moving party are not controverted, there is no reason for the application of the rule requiring writing.⁶⁵ In applying the rule, it has been held that, where affidavits are made by one party in support of the assertion that an oral stipulation was made and the assertion is not contradicted in the same manner by the opposite party, it must be deemed to be admitted;⁶⁶ and a mere denial by the latter of any knowledge that such a stipulation was made is not a denial of the fact that one was made.⁶⁷ It has similarly been held that, where there is no dispute as to the terms of a stipulation, but only as to its construction and effect, there is no sufficient reason why it should not be considered by the court.⁶⁸

(4) Where Stipulation Executed

The rule requiring stipulations to be in writing has no application to stipulations made out of court which have been executed in whole or in part.

The rule requiring stipulations to be in writing has no application to oral stipulations made out of court which have been executed in whole or in part.⁶⁹ This principle has been most frequently applied where one of the parties, in reliance on a stipulation, has done, or omitted to do, some act which, except for the stipulation, he would not have done, or omitted to do. In these circumstances the court will hold the stipulation to be effectual so as not to mislead, prejudice, or defraud those who have relied or acted on it in good faith.⁷⁰ If it were otherwise, the rule requiring stipulations to be in writing would be converted into a mere device to promote injustice and wrong,⁷¹ and to permit gross fraud.⁷² Furthermore, all the elements which are necessary to create an estoppel are present.⁷³ Nevertheless, in order to afford relief under an oral agreement, it must clearly and unequivocally appear that one was made.⁷⁴

When required by statute or rule of court, stipulations made out of court must be signed by the parties to be charged or their attorneys, and a stipulation signed by one of the parties only is of no effect, although it has been held that a stipulation may be valid even though not signed by all the parties to the litigation.

Stipulations made out of court with respect to pending causes, in addition to being put in writing, as discussed supra § 4, must, if so required by statute or rule of court, be signed by the parties to be charged or their attorneys.⁷⁵ Where a party appears in person in the trial court, it has been held that a stipulation consenting to judgment in a high-

(1) Error or inadvertence on part of attorney in signing stipulation as attorney for plaintiff instead of as attorney for himself as administrator of the estate of one original plaintiff and as attorney for administrator of estate of another original plaintiff was too trifling to render stipulation invalid.—*Hanson v. er court must be signed by him;⁷⁶ but it has also been held that a litigant who is not an attorney does not come within the purview of a rule requiring all agreements between attorneys to be signed by them.⁷⁷ A stipulation signed by one of the parties only is of no effect;⁷⁸ but, in the absence of a statute or rule of court providing otherwise,⁷⁹ a stipulation may be valid and binding although not signed by all the parties to the litigation,⁸⁰ as where it is of such nature as to affect only the interests of some parties and is signed only by such parties.⁸¹

The requirement of signing has no application to stipulations made in open court,⁸² or which have been acted on.⁸³ Further, it has been held that a stipulation contained in the transcript between depositions filed as a whole, the caption of the first of which referred to in the stipulation showed that counsel for all parties were present when the depositions were taken and purporting to be made "between counsel representing all parties," is binding, although not authenticated by the signature of any counsel.⁸⁴ It has also been held that an appellate court will recognize an unsigned stipulation made in the court below where it appears as a part of the record.⁸⁵

Genuineness of signatures. Genuineness of signatures to stipulations, if not denied, is considered as admitted;⁸⁶ and, in any event, it has been held that one who joins in signing a stipulation with the other parties in the action in effect authenticates the signatures of the others and is not in a position to dispute them and insist on the court's requiring proof of any of the signatures.⁸⁷

a. In General

There must be a compliance with statutes or rules of court requiring stipulations to be filed with the clerk, or entered in the minutes of the court, or otherwise made a part of the record, unless, as sometimes provided, the stipulation is in writing and duly signed; and failure to comply has been held to deprive the court of power to act on the stipulation, although it has also been said that the requirement is not jurisdictional.

is not put on the record,⁹³ has been held to be of no effect, and it has been declared that oral stipulations made in open court should be made a part of the record.⁹⁴

On the other hand, statutes and rules of court of the character under consideration do not require a construction that in no instance shall a stipulation be binding unless entered in the minutes of the court or filed with the clerk.⁹⁵ They have no application to agreements not relating to steps in the cause, but made before the commencement of the action,⁹⁶ to agreements affecting subsequent causes of action on different issues,⁹⁷ to agreements to settle the matters in controversy by arbitration or in any other amicable manner,⁹⁸ or to stipulations which are admitted.⁹⁹ Moreover, it has been held that a written stipulation that the testimony of a witness on a former trial may be read in the trial of a cause is not of such nature as to require that it be filed in the cause.¹ As a general rule, the requirements have reference to executory agreements only, and not to those which have been wholly or in part executed;² and if, under the terms of a stipulation, one party received the advantage for which he entered into it, and the other party at his instance gives up some right or loses some advantage so that it would be inequitable for him to insist that the stipulation was invalid, he will not be permitted to repudiate it on the ground that the requirements as to filing or entry in the minutes of the court have not been complied with,³ but this rule will not be applied where an attorney by oral stipulation has attempted to stipulate away his client's cause of action or defense.⁴

b. Time for Filing or Entry

It seems that a stipulation may be filed or entered of record at any time as long as it is capable of being properly and conveniently carried into effect by the parties and the court.

There is no fixed rule as to the time for filing or entering a stipulation, but it seems that this may be done at any time as long as it is capable of being properly and conveniently carried into effect by the parties and the court.⁵ Mere delay in filing a stipulation will not prevent its enforcement where no injury results by reason thereof;⁶ and it has been held that a stipulation may be entered nunc pro tunc after trial⁷ or after entry of judgment or decree.⁸ It has also been held that a nunc pro tunc entry may be made at a subsequent term to cover such an omission.⁹ It has further been held, however, that a record entry cannot be made after a dispute has arisen as to the terms of the agreement.¹⁰

c. Place of Filing or Entry

A parol stipulation made in open court and entered on the minutes, agreeing to the discontinuance of an action pending in another court, will be enforced, but when parties enter into agreements affecting causes before an appellate court it has been held that they must be filed there.

A parol stipulation made in open court and entered on the minutes, agreeing to the discontinuance of an action pending in another court, will be enforced.¹¹ However, it has been held that when parties or their counsel enter into agreements affecting any causes before the appellate court, such agreements must be filed there with the record in such cause, otherwise the court cannot consider them or be governed thereby in any manner.¹²

d. Effect

A stipulation duly signed and filed becomes a part of the record of the case, and has the same effect as an order of the court, agreed to by the parties, and may have the effect of a pleading.

Motion to strike from record. After entry of final decree, the court was without jurisdiction to receive and pass on a motion to strike from the record a stipulation previously filed, but not called to the attention of the court.¹⁸

§ 7. — Supervision and Assent of Court

The supervisory power of the court over stipulations made in the course of the proceedings continues as long as it retains jurisdiction, and, in the absence of a controlling statute or rule of court, whether or not a stipulation requires the assent of the court depends in a large measure on its nature.

Generally speaking, a stipulation is a proceeding in the cause and as such is under the supervision of the court, as discussed supra § 1, and the supervisory power of the court continues as long as it retains jurisdiction of the action in the course of which the stipulation was made.¹⁹ In the absence of a controlling statute or rule of court,²⁰ whether or not a stipulation requires the assent of the court depends in a large measure on its nature. Not all stipulations require the assent of the court. For instance, it has been held that a stipulation extending the time to answer is operative of its own force without an order of court.²¹ On the other hand, some stipulations have been held ineffective unless approved by the court,²² such as a stipulation for a continuance,²³ to set aside a judgment,²⁴ or as to the matter which shall form a part of the record on appeal.²⁵ It has been held that the assent of the court to stipulations affecting the proceedings will be assumed until its dissent therefrom is indicated.²⁶ However, the court can always refuse to sanction such stipulations when right and justice so require,²⁷ as where it appears that the provisions of the stipulation are more likely to complicate than simplify the progress of the action,²⁸ and in so doing can change what appears on the record of a prior ruling, particularly where it is done within the term.²⁹ Further, in a proper case it has been held that the court may on motion of one of the parties modify

a stipulation.³⁰ However, it has also been held that the terms of a binding stipulation may not be altered subsequently without the assent of the parties.³¹

§ 8. — Consideration

While it has been held or said that no consideration or mutuality is required to give validity to a stipulation concerning a pending cause, it has also been said that a stipulation imports an agreement based on consideration, and there is authority to the effect that stipulations, or at least some stipulations, without consideration are invalid.

It is held or said in several decisions that no consideration is necessary,³² and no mutuality required,³³ to give validity to a stipulation concerning a pending cause. On the other hand, it has been said that a stipulation imports an agreement based on consideration,³⁴ and there is authority to the effect that stipulations,³⁵ or at least some stipulations,³⁶ without consideration are invalid. In a number of decisions the courts have held that, in the particular case, the consideration was sufficient.³⁷

§ 9. Capacity and Authority to Enter into Stipulation

A valid stipulation may not be entered into by a person purporting to act on behalf of a party without legal capacity or authority to do so, but, where the requisite authority exists, a stipulation may be made by an agent of one of the parties to an action.

A valid stipulation may not be entered into by a person purporting to act on behalf of a party without legal capacity or authority to do so.³⁸ Where the requisite authority exists, a stipulation may be made by an agent of one of the parties to an action.³⁹ A nominal party who has no actual interest in the result of the action cannot, by stipulation, deprive the real parties in interest of their rights.⁴⁰ Also, in an action in the nature of a representative action the nominal plaintiff cannot by stipulation deprive the persons whom he represents of their rights.⁴¹

Persons not parties. Filing in a suit, by one not a party, of a stipulation to be bound by the decree to be entered is irregular; he should be made a party if he is to be affected by the proceeding.⁴² It has been held, however, that the mere fact that a stipulation as made by the parties is signed by others, or its performance guaranteed, or an agreement made to save harmless a party, does not thereby divest the court of its jurisdiction in the action, and the rights of all parties so joining in a stipulation must be held to be dependent on the rights of the parties to the action in which the stipulation is made.⁴³ A party successfully demurring remains a party, where no order dismissing the action as to such party has been entered, and may subsequently stipulate for dismissal.⁴⁴

Any matter which involves the individual rights or obligations of the parties inter sese in an action or proceeding in court may properly be made the subject of a stipulation between them,⁵¹ provided the stipulation is not illegal,⁵² unreasonable, or against good morals or sound public policy,⁵³ and does not impinge on, or interfere with, the general powers, duties, and prerogatives of the court in its relations to litigants other than themselves and to the general public and the state.⁵⁴ These rights may relate to procedural matters⁵⁵ or evidential matters, as discussed infra subdivision f (7) of this section, and they may involve the substantive rights of the parties and the concession of some rights as a consideration for those secured.⁵⁶ On the other hand, stipulations involving matters of public interest,⁵⁷ or which affect the interests of individuals, which cannot be ascertained in advance of the adjudication in the cause,⁵⁸ are invalid. The parties may not, by agreements concerning procedure, take away the discretion of the court to control at all times the procedure and progress of causes to the end that justice may be done,⁵⁹ or waive or abrogate the requirements of statutes or rules of trial or appellate courts adopted to promote the expeditious and orderly hearing of causes;⁶⁰ nor can the parties by stipulation require the court to do something which is not within its power.⁶¹ All stipulations relating to proceedings in the courts, civil or criminal, which may involve anything inconsistent with the full and impartial course of justice therein are void, although not open to the actual charge of corruption.⁶²

b. Jurisdiction

Jurisdiction may be questioned, even by a litigant invoking jurisdiction in the first instance, despite a stipulation, and litigants cannot make stipulations the effect of which is to limit jurisdiction or to oust a court of jurisdiction.

While a court may acquire jurisdiction of the person by consent, jurisdiction of the subject matter of an action or other legal proceeding, subject to certain limitations, cannot be conferred by stipulation or consent, as discussed in Courts § 85. Jurisdiction may be questioned even by the litigant invoking jurisdiction in the first instance, despite the most solemn stipulation.⁶³ Since the powers and duties of courts are prescribed by statute,⁶⁴ litigants or their counsel cannot make stipulations the effect of which is to limit or curtail jurisdiction,⁶⁵ or to oust a court of jurisdiction,⁶⁶ or to deprive it of its power to pronounce judgment on all of the material facts in the case.⁶⁷ Litigants cannot be permitted to stipulate jurisdiction to suit their own convenience.⁶⁸ It has been held, however, that by stipulation and for the convenience

Extradition proceedings

Public interest is affected by extradition proceedings and court is charged with protection of such interest to same extent as those officers on whom duty is immediately imposed so that stipulations of the parties in such proceedings are not bind-of counsel, a motion or petition may, at times, be heard outside the jurisdiction of the county by a judge who heard the main case while acting in such county.⁶⁹

c. Benefit of Statutes, Constitutional Provisions, or Rules of Law

The benefit of a statute or constitutional provision enacted for the protection of a party, or of a rule of law, may be waived by stipulation where it is a matter of private right.

The benefit of a statute or constitutional provision enacted for the protection of a party,⁷⁰ or of a rule of law,⁷¹ may be waived by him by stipulation where it is a matter of private right and no considerations of public policy or morals are infringed by so doing, and, having once consented to forego his right, he cannot afterward assert it.⁷²

d. Validity or Constitutionality of Statutes

It is not within the power of litigants to stipulate as to the validity or constitutionality of a statute.

Since the question of the validity or constitution-ality of a statute is a judicial question, as discussed in Constitutional Law § 92, it is not within the power of parties litigant to admit or stipulate as to its validity or constitutionality.⁷³ The rights of many others may, and probably do, depend on the decision of the question,⁷⁴ and the public interest involved transcends the rights of the litigants.⁷⁵ Moreover, to uphold such admissions or stipulations would permit litigants to nullify any enactment of the legislature.⁷⁶

e. Questions of Law

It is generally held that it is not competent for the litigants to stipulate as to what the law is so as to bind the court, and that such stipulations will be disregarded; and this rule has found frequent application.

While litigants have the undoubted right to stipulate as to the facts, as discussed infra subdivision f (9) of this section, it is very generally held that it is not competent for them to stipulate as to what the law is so as to bind the court, and that such stipulations will be disregarded.⁷⁷ Decisions of questions of law must rest on the judgment of the law and are valid.⁹⁶ There are decisions in which it is said that what is admitted or conceded to be law by plaintiff or defendant, as the case may be, at the trial of a cause is binding on him, and, if it is accepted by the other side, it becomes the law of the particular case;⁹⁷ and there are others in which it is broadly stated that parties may, where there is a stipulation, in many ways make the law for any legal proceeding to which they are parties, which not only binds them, but which the court is bound to enforce;⁹⁸ but in a number of these last mentioned decisions nothing is actually held which would conflict with the general rule heretofore stated,⁹⁹ although in others, the results reached are apparently in direct conflict therewith.¹

f. Validity of Particular Stipulations Considered

- (1) To abide event of another suit
- (2) As to process
- (3) As to dismissal or discontinuance
- (4) As to parties
- (5) As to pleadings
- (6) As to issues
- (7) As to evidence
- (8) As to admissions
- (9) As to agreed statement of facts
- (10) As to trial
- (11) As to instructions and verdict
- (12) As to judgments and executions
- (13) As to injunctions
- (14) Other stipulations

(1) To Abide Event of Another Suit

Parties may make a valid stipulation that the judgment in one suit shall abide the event of another suit pending involving the same issues or interests, and it is not essential to the validity of such a stipulation that it be mutually beneficial.

Parties may make a valid stipulation that the judgment in one suit shall abide the event of another suit pending involving the same issues or interests,² and such stipulation will be enforced according to its terms.³ Such stipulations tend to prevent a multiplicity of trials and a multiplication of expense of attending them and of court costs,⁴ and are favored by the courts;⁵ and it is not essential to the validity of such stipulations that they be mutually beneficial.⁶ Nevertheless, a stipulation that the judgment in one suit shall abide the event of another suit pending between the same parties is not valid and binding, unless the material facts are the same in both cases;⁷ and, if the questions are entirely dissimilar, and there is no connection between the suits, the stipulation will be held void as a mere wager.⁸ It has also been held that a stipulation to abide the event of another suit which in addition undertakes to curtail administrative action following judicial determination is invalid as attempting to curtail the power of the government to enforce its own laws.⁹

(2) As to Process

Want of service of process or defective service thereof may be obviated by stipulations between the parties themselves, but the parties may not stipulate on the subject of process where the matter is governed by statute and the statute is exclusive.

While, as discussed in Attorney and Client § 83, an attorney, as such, has no power to accept service of process by which the court acquires jurisdiction

Stipulation not considered as involving law

Contention that stipulation that taxpayer's computation in his return of gain or loss resulting from sale of securities received on termination of trust would be accepted as fact agreed on if taxpayer had contingent and not vested interest in corporation of trust before its termination was stipulation as to subsidiary question of law, and therefore not binding on circuit court of appeals, would not be considered where raised for first time in circuit court of appeals, particularly where it was uncertain if statute providing for determining gain or loss was applicable and effect of stipulation was of no concern to anyone over the party, unless he has in some manner been sufficiently authorized to do so, an objection for want of service of process,¹⁰ or for defective service,¹¹ may be obviated by stipulations between the parties themselves. Where the statutory method governing process is not exclusive, the parties may stipulate on the subject,¹² but not where the statutory method is deemed exclusive.¹³ Acknowledgment of service of a paper in a suit is in no sense a stipulation that its recitals are true, but is merely for the purpose of supplying evidence of service.¹⁴

(3) As to Dismissal or Discontinuance

A stipulation by the attorney to dismiss or discontinue an action is binding on the client when he expressly assents thereto, or where counsel has acted in accordance with his specific instructions, and, according to some authorities, the plaintiff may enter such a stipulation without the knowledge or consent, or against the protest of, his attorney.

A stipulation by the attorney to dismiss or discontinue an action is binding on the client when he expressly assents thereto,¹⁵ or where counsel has acted in accordance with his specific instructions.¹⁶ So, also, it has been held that plaintiff in an action has the right by stipulation to dismiss or discontinue the action without the knowledge or consent, or against the protest of, his attorney,¹⁷ or although he has expressly agreed not to compromise without the attorney's consent;¹⁸ but other decisions have reached a directly opposite conclusion, and hold that the client has no right to dismiss or discontinue the suit without his attorney's consent, and that a stipulation for that purpose is invalid and inoperative.¹⁹ The rule that, where a release is offered in defense, it is the province of the jury and not of the court to determine whether there has been fraud in obtaining the release does not apply to a case where,

with the release, a stipulation was made to dismiss a pending action without cost to either party, in which case, on a motion to dismiss in accordance with the stipulation, the determination by the court of the question whether the person signing the stipulation knew and understood what he was signing is not erroneous.²⁰

Claim of minor. Where the interests of a minor are involved in an action or proceeding, it has been held that a stipulation by his guardian ad litem and attorney providing for the dismissal of the minor's claim, if not sustained by certain evidence, not otherwise legally conclusive, cannot be upheld unless it is shown to be in the best interests of the minor;²¹ nor can it be sustained as a compromise of the minor's claim without showing a compliance with statutory requirements governing such compromises.²²

(4) As to Parties

Parties cannot bind the court by stipulation with respect to necessary parties; but irregularity in joinder of parties may be waived by stipulation, and a person may stipulate that he is a party.

Parties cannot bind the court by stipulation with respect to necessary parties,²³ and the appellate court is not bound thereby, even though the stipulation was approved by the trial court.²⁴ However, irregularity in joinder of parties may be waived by stipulation,²⁵ and a person may make a binding stipulation that he is a party.²⁶ Where an original order bringing in a party has been entered on stipulation, its terms may be subsequently changed to permit plaintiff to serve a new pleading.²⁷

A qualification to sue may not be supplied by a stipulation of parties or counsel.²⁸

(5) As to Pleadings

The parties may, by stipulation, dispense with designated pleadings, waive defects therein, provide for their amendment or withdrawal, and do various other things in connection with the pleadings; but it has been held that a stipulation as to pleadings does not prevent the judge in the exercise of his discretion from striking them out if he is otherwise justified in so doing.

The parties may, by stipulation, dispense with such of the pleadings as are therein designated,²⁹ and may dispense altogether with pleadings and submit the case on an agreed statement of facts.³⁰ Stipulations waiving defects in the pleadings are valid,³¹ and the waiver may be either express or implied.³² Stipulations have been held valid which provide for an amendment of the pleadings,³³ or that pleadings shall be deemed amended,³⁴ or for the withdrawal of certain pleadings and the substitution of others.³⁵ So, also, stipulations have been held valid which provide for an abandonment of part of plaintiff's claim;³⁶ which waive the necessity of demand as a condition precedent to the requirement of a bill of particulars,³⁷ objections in respect of parties,³⁸ or service of a copy of an amended pleading;³⁹ which extend the time to answer or plead;⁴⁰ which provide that a demurrer may be overruled and defendant allowed to answer;⁴¹ which waive irregularity in proceedings to compel an answer;⁴² allow a defense to be set up which would not otherwise be permissible,⁴³ allow the introduction of evidence on the merits without reference to the pleadings on file,⁴⁴ or the admission of evidence of special defenses without specially pleading them;⁴⁵ or which provide for a trial on the merits without a restoration of lost pleadings,⁴⁶ or authorize a broader relief than the pleadings alone would sustain.⁴⁷ It has been held, however, that an agreement of counsel as to pleadings does not prevent the judge in the exercise of his discretion from striking them out if he is otherwise justified in so doing.⁴⁸

(6) As to Issues

As a general rule, litigants may prescribe the issues to be tried and may limit or broaden the issues made by the pleadings.

While the issues in a case are usually such as are made by the pleadings, litigants are nevertheless at liberty to prescribe the issues to be tried,⁴⁹ provided the issues are within the power of the court to try;⁵⁰ and they may modify or limit the issues made or to be made by the pleadings,⁵¹ or waive the issues made by the pleadings and stipulate for a trial on the merits regardless of such issues,⁵² or they may broaden the issues raised by the pleadings or waive the objection that the issue agreed on is not embraced by the pleadings.⁵³ Similarly, they may change the rules of evidence as to what may be shown by way of defense under a general denial.⁵⁴ However, it has been declared that, as the law of procedure prescribes the method of invoking jurisdiction to determine justiciable issues, the agreement of the parties undertaking to impose on the courts the duty of deciding such issues, without appropriate pleadings, is a practice which cannot be approved.⁵⁵

(7) As to Evidence

Generally speaking, the parties or their counsel may stipulate as to evidential matters, such as the admission, exclusion, or withdrawal of evidence, or as to the necessity of evidence to prove designated facts, but stipulations which are clearly against public policy will not be tolerated.

Generally speaking, the parties or their counsel may stipulate as to evidential matters.⁵⁶ They may enter valid stipulations as to the admission,⁵⁷ exclusion,⁵⁸ or withdrawal⁵⁹ of evidence. They may by stipulation dispense with the necessity of evidence to prove designated facts,⁶⁰ waive objections to evidence,⁶¹ or the necessity for laying a foundation for the admission of evidence;⁶² they may agree on the manner of taking evidence;⁶³ a they may allow copies of papers to be admitted evidence in place of the originals,⁶⁴ allow the reading from records of title papers,⁶⁵ remedy defects in documents introduced in evidence,⁶⁶ authorize the admission of documentary evidence instead of formal proof,⁶⁷ agree to the use of affidavits of evidence,⁶⁸ allow laws of a foreign state or territory, whether statutory or common, to be considered as evidence,⁶⁹ allow the trial court to take knowledge of decisions of another state brought to its notice,⁷⁰ waive objections to the competency of witnesses,⁷¹ agree as to the qualifications of a witness,⁷² agree that a witness has been impeached,⁷³ limit the evidence on the issues in a case,⁷⁴ as by restricting the number of witnesses to be used on a particular issue,⁷⁵ limit the purpose for which evidence is introduced,⁷⁶ make testimony offered by one party competent as to all of the parties,⁷⁷ or extend the time for taking testimony or proof.⁷⁸ So the parties may by agreement impose the burden of proof on one of the parties to show certain facts,⁷⁹ and they may agree to close the evidence within a designated time,⁸⁰ or to submit the cause without further evidence,⁸¹ or agree as to what evidence shall be considered by the trier of facts.⁸² In a proper case the admission of testimony under a stipulation by virtue of which counsel is not required constantly to renew his objections is a proper practice.⁸³

On the other hand, the doctrine upholding the validity of stipulations in respect of evidence is subject to the important limitation that stipulations which are clearly against public policy will not be tolerated.⁸⁴ Further, it has been held that the parties cannot agree to oust the court of jurisdiction to admit all evidence applicable to a cause,⁸⁵ or make evidence conclusive which is not legally conclusive,⁸⁶ or deprive the court of its jurisdiction to admit competent circumstantial evidence by a stipulation requiring direct and positive proof of a fact;⁸⁷ and counsel cannot, by stipulation or otherwise, require a court to admit testimony which, under legal rules, is not admissible as evidence in a case.⁸⁸

Depositions. It is competent by stipulation to waive objections to depositions on the grounds that the causes for taking depositions did not exist,⁸⁹

that there were defects and irregularities in taking the depositions,⁹⁰ that the witnesses were not sworn,⁹¹ that the deposition was not certified in accordance with statutory requirements,⁹² or that the depositions were admitted in lieu of record evidence or a certified copy thereof.⁹³ Where the parties to an action expressly stipulated that a deposition should not be admitted in evidence, its exclusion must follow.⁹⁴

Testimony of absent witnesses. The parties may agree as to what testimony an absent witness would give, if present, and that the facts so stipulated may be used as evidence,⁹⁵ and waive the presence of a witness and agree to have his written testimony read to the jury.⁹⁶ This method of proof, however, is not commended in some cases.⁹⁷

Evidence admitted in other actions or on former trials of same case. Litigants may validly stipulate for the admission in evidence of testimony admitted in other actions, or on former trials of the same cause,⁹⁸ even though the deposition of the witness could have been taken at the later trial,⁹⁹ or the witness is present and is examined at the later trial.¹ A stipulation limiting proofs to testimony

(8) As to Admissions

As a general rule, the parties may by stipulation admit or agree on the existence of designated facts, but it has been held that a stipulation as to a factual matter is not controlling where the jurisdiction of a court is involved and the fact has been established in the manner provided by law.

The parties may by stipulation admit or agree on the existence of designated facts for the purposes of the trial.³ This practice, it has been said, is deserving of the encouragement of the courts, and is favored by them,⁴ especially where the proof would consist of the formal introduction of lengthy documentary evidence with which counsel can thoroughly familiarize themselves prior to the trial.⁵ This practice, it has been said, conduces to simplify the issues to be tried, by narrowing the litigation to the precise matters in controversy; it saves time and expense and avoids delay and surprise.⁶ It has been held, however, that any concession or stipulation as to a factual matter is of no controlling significance where the jurisdiction of a court is involved and the fact has been established in the manner provided by law.⁷

(9) As to Agreed Statement of Facts

Ordinarily, litigants may stipulate as to agreed statement of facts on which to submit their case to the court; such statements must contain every essential element without any omission and be clear and definite.

Distinguished from submission of controversy without action

(1) An agreed statement of facts on which a case is submitted in lieu of evidence is not within the purview of the statute providing for the submission of controversies for judicial decision without action, or at common law.

Mo.—Byers v. Essex Inv. Co., 219 S. W. 570, 281 Mo. 375—Treece State Bank v. Wade, App., 283 S.W. 714.

N.Y.—Nott v. Klein, 285 N.Y.S. 1025, 169 Misc. 35.

(2) Submission of controversies to courts for determination on a statement of facts agreed to by the parties without action see Submission of Controversy §§ 1-17.

Compared with, and distinguished from, "case stated"

(1) A stipulation for submission on an "agreed statement of facts" and a stipulation for submission on a "case stated" are similar.—Scaccia v. Boston Elevated R. Co., 57 N.E.2d 761, 317 Mass. 245.

(2) There is, however, a distinction, although not infrequently the words "agreed facts" or "agreed statement of facts" are used where it would be more accurate to speak of a "case stated."—Fratl v. Jannini, 115 N.E. 746, 226 Mass. 430.

(3) An agreement of the parties as to the evidence which shall be considered by the court or jury is strictly speaking an "agreed statement of facts" which merely takes the place of the evidence which would otherwise be introduced in the usual way, and either the jury render a general verdict or the judge makes a general finding founded on that evidence.—Duff v. Town of Southbridge, 90 N. E.2d 12, 325 Mass. 224—Mellen v. Modern Parlor Frame Corp., 73 N.E. 2d 247, 321 Mass. 305—King Features are, indeed, encouraged by the courts,⁹ subject to some limitations,¹⁰ including the obvious limitations that the parties cannot thus confer jurisdiction on a court which has not jurisdiction of the subject matter of the action in which the agreed statement of facts is made,¹¹ or enter into a stipulation of facts the effect of which is to limit the jurisdiction of the court.¹² The statement must appear to have been made in a case legally before the court for its decision; the parties cannot, by their agreement, present a case to the court for its decision in a manner not authorized by law.¹³

An agreed statement must contain every essential element without any omission,¹⁴ and should contain nothing but the material facts in issue, anything more being regarded as surplusage.¹⁵ In order to sustain judgment for plaintiff, the statement must show all the facts necessary to his recovery.¹⁶ The facts agreed on should be clearly and definitely stated,¹⁷ according to the decisions on the ques-

Syndicate v. Cape Cod Broadcasting Co., 59 N.E.2d 481, 317 Mass. 652—Cerwonka v. Town of Saugus, 55 N.E.2d 1, 316 Mass. 152—Atlantic Maritime Co. v. City of Gloucester, 117 N.E. 924, 228 Mass. 519—Frati v. Jannini, 115 N.E. 746, 226 Mass. 430.

(4) On the other hand, "case stated" is the accurate phrase to describe an agreement under which the parties agree on all the material ultimate facts on which the rights of the parties are to be determined by the law.—King Features Syndicate v. Cape Cod Broadcasting Co., 59 N.E.2d 481, 317 Mass. 652—Cassie v. City of Cambridge, 58 N.E.2d 169, 317 Mass. 346—Grant v. Aldermen of Northampton, 55 N.E.2d 705, 316 Mass. 432—Cerwonka v. Town of Saugus, 55 N.E.2d 1, 316 Mass. 152—Frati v. Jannini, 115 N.E. 746, 226 Mass. 430.

(5) Under a statute empowering the appellate court as well as other courts to draw inferences of fact from a case stated, unless the parties expressly withhold such power, this distinction becomes important since in the case of an agreed statement of facts, while the trial court could draw inferences from it as it could from other evidence, it has been held that the appellate court can review those inferences only to the extent of seeing whether they were unwarranted as a matter of law.—Scaccia v. Boston Elevated R. Co., 57 N.E.2d 761, 317 Mass. 245—Atlantic Maritime Co. v. City of Gloucester, 117 N.E. 924, 228 Mass. 519.

(6) In a number of decisions particular stipulations have been deemed to be agreements as to evidence and not a case stated.—Maguire v. Hadad, 91 N.E.2d 769, 325 Mass. 590—Duff v. Town of Southbridge, 90 N.E.2d 12, 325 Mass. 224—Mellen v. Modern Parlor Frame Corp., 73 N.E.2d 247, 321 Mass. 305—King Features Syndicate v. Cape Cod Broadcasting Co., 59 N.E.2d 481, 317 Mass. 652—Cerwonka v. Town of Saugus, 55 N.E.2d 1, 316 Mass. 152.

(7) Power of a reviewing court to draw inferences from an agreed statement see Appeal and Error § 1458.

(8) Submission of cause for trial by court on case stated see the C.J.S.

title Trial § 578, also 64 C.J. p 1191 notes 97-7.

Method of determining nature of statement

Whether an agreed statement is a case stated, an agreed statement of facts, or merely a part or whole of the evidence, will be determined by the court from the substance of the thing done, and not from the name or description used.—Scaccia v. Boston Elevated Ry., 32 N.E.2d 253, 308 Mass. 310—Frati v. Jannini, 115 N.E. 746, 226 Mass. 430.

Pleadings, depositions, and exceptions

Where parties stipulated that the court should determine all issues on pleadings, depositions, and exceptions to the depositions, and make an order directing proceedings to be dismissed or directing parties to proceed to arbitration, court had power to adjudicate and make appropriate disposition of petition for arbitration.—Grocery & Food Warehousemen Local Union No. 635 of the Intern. Broth. of Teamsters, Chauffeurs, Warehousemen & Helpers of America, A. F. of L. v. Kroger Co., 70 A.2d 218, 364 Pa. 195.

Where complaint is completely admitted by answer, it may be treated as the equivalent of an agreed statement of fact.—Security Trust Co. of Rochester v. Bradley, 38 N.Y.S.2d 918, 179 Misc. 338, affirmed Security Trust Co. of Rochester v. Burlew, 46 N.Y.S.2d 222, 266 App.Div. 943.

Judgment for defendant

(1) Ordinarily, where the agreed statement does not contain facts sufficient to warrant a finding for plaintiff, judgment of necessity must be for defendant.

Mass.—Boston v. Brooks, 73 N.E. 206, 187 Mass. 286.

(2) However, if it fails to ascertain any element of fact necessary to plaintiff's recovery, and the obvious inference from the facts stated is sufficient to deny judgment to defendant, it is the duty of the court to strike the case stated from the record and order the cause to proceed before a jury as if it had not been submitted.—Klopp v. tion, and nothing should be left to inference.¹⁸ It may incorporate exhibits by specific reference.¹⁹ These agreements often contain express reservation of the right to interpose objections to the competency, sufficiency, or legal effect of the facts stated.²⁰ An agreed statement of facts is not the pleadings or the issues, but simply the proofs on which the cause is tried,²¹ unless the terms of the agreement itself gives it a broader scope.²² It must be treated as a special verdict, or as the equivalent of a special finding of fact, as discussed infra § 25, and, as such equivalent, there must be an agreement on all ultimate facts and not a mere presentation of evidence from which such facts or any of them may be inferred.²³

Qualification of admissions of fact in the stipulation by the provision that parties do not admit the legal effect of facts admitted is proper, since the ultimate determination of such legal effect rests with the court.²⁴

(10) As to Trial

The parties may make such stipulations as to trial as are not in contravention of peremptory requirements of law or rules of court.

The parties to a cause may make such stipulations as to the trial and hearing thereof as are not in contravention of peremptory requirements of the law or of rules of court.²⁵ Thus they may stipulate as to the time²⁶ or place²⁷ of trial, or shorten the time for commencing an action within the original jurisdiction of the supreme court, with approval of the court.²⁸ So they may stipulate as to the order of proof;²⁹ that the case be tried and decided by one member of the court, the others being disqualified;³⁰ that the cause may be tried at chambers or in vacation,³¹ or passed without prejudice to any of the parties to the suit;³² that issues of fact may be tried and determined by the court without a jury;³³ that some fact issues are to be left to the jury to determine and others are to be determined by the court;³⁴ that the case be submitted to the court without a jury, and be decided on documents then on file in the court, and the case be taken up by the court at the pleasure of the judge, without reference to the presence of attorneys of either party;³⁵ that the issues in an equity case may be tried by jury and judgment rendered on a general verdict;³⁶ that an action at law be tried as a suit in equity;³⁷ that a case may be transferred from the common law to the equity docket;³⁸ that damages in an equity suit may be ascertained by arbitrators under the direction of the master;³⁹ that the case may be submitted to the jury without argument;⁴⁰ that the jury be discharged and the case decided by the court on the evidence adduced;⁴¹ that several causes be consolidated;⁴² provided the causes are such as may be properly consolidated;⁴³ and provided the consent of the court is obtained;⁴⁴ that an appeal prayed from the decision of a municipal board may be tried in the circuit court de novo, on such evidence as might be introduced;⁴⁵ and that an order requiring security for costs, which is not required by statute to be recorded, was made on a certain date.⁴⁶ Where a cause was taken under advisement by the court with the understanding that, when the case was decided and judgment rendered, an exception would be entered for the losing party, but by mistake the exception was not entered, the court will, on motion of the losing party, correct the record by entry of the exception.⁴⁷

On the other hand, it has been held that a statutory requirement as to service of notice of trial and filing of notice of issue cannot be evaded by stipulation,⁴⁸ and it is not competent for the parties by stipulation to split up the issues or try them seriatim, reserving the right to have two or more judgments and two or more rights of appeal.⁴⁹ Also, although there is authority to the contrary,⁵⁰ it has been held that the necessity of objections and exceptions cannot be obviated by stipulation in advance that they shall be considered as made,⁵¹ and that parties cannot stipulate that a member of the bar shall try the case in the place of the judge.⁵² Likewise, it has been held that a stipulation to hold in abeyance an order requiring defendant to answer interrogatories without knowledge or consent of the court is improper.⁵³ A stipulation to set a case for trial at an indefinite time in the future cannot divest the trial court of the right to exercise its discretion to dismiss the action for want of prosecution.⁵⁴

(11) As to Instructions and Verdict

Parties may bind themselves by stipulation as to the instructions and verdict if the stipulation is not in contravention of peremptory statutory requirements.

Parties may bind themselves by stipulation that the cause be submitted to the jury without instructions,⁵⁵ or that proposed instructions be deemed correct as a matter of law.⁵⁶ However, a stipulation to waive the provisions of a statute governing exceptions and objections to a charge, the provisions of which are intended to protect against the commission of error in the court's charge, and to avoid unnecessary appeals and reversals, will not be respected by either appellate or trial courts.⁵⁷ The parties may stipulate that a consent verdict shall be rendered,⁵⁸ that the verdict shall be ren-

(12) As to Judgments and Executions

The parties may stipulate to extend the time for rendition of judgment, as to the character of the judgment or order to be entered, and various other matters in connection with judgment or execution, but they cannot stipulate as to the meaning or effect of the judgment.

The parties may stipulate to extend the time for rendition of judgment,⁷¹ as to the character of the judgment or order to be entered,⁷² that recovery in attachment proceedings against a third person by plaintiff and defendant in the instant case be distributed ratably between them,⁷³ that a confession of judgment should be held in escrow as long as the debtor performed the conditions imposed on him,⁷⁴ to reduce the amount of the judgment by consent,⁷⁵ and that the court may modify the decree as might be deemed just.⁷⁶ It has been held, however, that a stipulation in conflict with the provisions of a judgment may be properly disregarded,⁷⁷ and that the parties cannot stipulate as to the meaning or effect of the judgment of the court.⁷⁸

The parties may stipulate for a stay of execution;⁷⁹ or that no execution would be taken out pending a motion for new trial;⁸⁰ or that execution shall be stayed until the decision of a certain other case pending in another court;⁸¹ or they may stipulate to postpone an execution issued on a judgment fraudulently entered on condition that no motion be made to set aside the judgment.⁸² It has been held, however, that the parties cannot by stipulation require the court to issue a body execution where it lacks power to do so.⁸³

(13) As to Injunctions

Parties may by stipulation modify or dissolve an Injunction, and on dissolution may stipulate the amount of damages.

Parties may lawfully by stipulation modify⁸⁵ or dissolve⁸⁶ an injunction; and, although a statute requires the filing of a motion to reinstate an injunction within a designated time after order of dissolution, the parties may make a binding agreement extending the time where such agreement is consented to by the court.⁸⁷ On dissolving a temporary injunction damages may be allowed in the sum consented to under the stipulation of the parties.⁸⁸

(14) Other Stipulations

A variety of stipulations have been held valid; but it has been held that a stipulation that a court record is erroneous is not binding on the trial court, and that a stipulation cannot alter the express statutory conditions of a bond.

Various stipulations, other than those discussed above, have been held valid, including stipulations as to the appointment of an administrator by a foreign court,⁸⁹ as to attorney's fees,⁹⁰ as to costs,⁹¹ as to expenses of administration,⁹² as to payment of designated funds to a party entitled thereto,⁹³ as to the presentation of a claim against a municipality,⁹⁴ as to setting aside an order of the court,⁹⁵ as to permitting the case to proceed in dual character,⁹⁶ and as to permitting a late filing of a written motion for a new trial.⁹⁷ Where there is a written agreement to the effect that the filing of the briefs in the court below is waived, and that they may be filed in the appellate court, a motion to dismiss for failure to file the briefs in the court below will be overruled.⁹⁸ It has been held that a stipulation that the record of the court trying the case is erroneous,⁹⁹ or that the record of another court is erroneous,¹ is not binding on the trial court, and that a stipulation cannot alter the express statutory conditions of a bond.²

Ambiguous stipulations

Resort must be had to rules of con-of stipulations is that the court must, if possible, ascertain and give effect to the intent of the parties.⁴ The construction, however, is not dependent on the secret purposes, motives, or expectations of one of the parties.⁵ Also, the court will not, by construction, extend a stipulation so as to give it an effect beyond its terms and beyond what the parties intended.⁶ Its language will not be so construed as to give it the effect of an admission of a fact obviously intended to be controverted,⁷ or a waiver of a right not plainly intended to be relinquished.⁸

Reasonable construction. A stipulation will not be given a forced construction.⁹ It should and will receive a fair construction,¹⁰ one which will render it reasonable and just to both parties, rather than unreasonable or unjust,¹¹ and such as will aid a fair trial on the merits.¹² struction where the stipulation is ambiguous.—Green v. Loberg, 237 N. W. 274, 205 Wis. 221.

By court

(1) Where parties cannot agree, court may construe stipulation.—Pioneer Irr. Dist. v. American Ditch Ass'n, 1 P.2d 196, 50 Idaho 732.

(2) The inferences to be drawn from stipulated facts are the function of the court.—Black v. Black, 204 P.2d 950, 91 Cal.App.2d 328.

The construction of a stipulation is a question of law for the court.—Billingslea v. Billingslea, 152 P.2d 276, 194 Okl. 400.

Inclusion of others

In action by corporation to recover excise taxes alleged to have been erroneously imposed on cash distributions to stockholders, where stipulation, filed after statute of limitations had expired, stated that consent to maintain action had been given by one stockholder only and that consent of others would be obtained, action could not be maintained on behalf of stockholders who had not consented thereto, notwithstanding stipulation, since as to them action was barred.—Sharp & Dohme v. U. S., C.C. A.Pa., 144 F.2d 456.

Remarks of judge

Where it was necessary for the court to make findings, even though the parties stipulated for appointment of appraiser of property, remarks of trial judge that judgment would be entered in accordance with stipulation, even if construable as disclosing trial judge's understanding that findings were unnecessary to entry of judgment, did not estop either party to insist that stipulation be understood according to its terms.—*Petroleum Midway Co. v. Liberal construction. While as a general rule stipulations are to be construed liberally¹³ and in furtherance of justice,¹⁴ and not in a narrow and technical manner,¹⁵ construction can be had only where there is room for construction; and, in the absence of a showing as to surrounding circumstances, it is the duty of the courts to ascertain the intent of the parties from the stipulation as evidenced by the writing, and no words are to be added to it or substituted in its stead.¹⁶ The court will not write into the stipulation something which the parties did not see fit to include therein.¹⁷

Favorable construction. In cases of doubt, that construction will be adopted which is most favorable to the party in whose favor the stipulation was made.¹⁸

Meaning of words and phrases. Words or phrases are to be given their ordinary and popular meaning if the context does not show that they are used in a peculiar sense.¹⁹ Technical words and phrases are to be given their technical meaning,²⁰ and terms having a well defined legal meaning are to be given that meaning.²¹ Such terms, however, should not be permitted to vitiate the plain terms of the stipulation,²² unless they were evidently used in a different sense.²³

Expressio unius. The doctrine that an express mention of one thing implies the exclusion of another has frequently been applied to stipulations.²⁴

Recitals in stipulation. Recitals of the cause and occasion of the stipulation are to be considered,²⁵ but they cannot be used for the purpose of enlarging the specific undertaking.²⁶

In favor of effectiveness. A construction will be avoided, if possible, which will make the stipulation frivolous or ineffectual.²⁷

Effect given to entire stipulation. A stipulation should not be construed so as to make a portion of

Stipulant a layman without counsel

The fact that stipulant was a layman appearing without counsel will not require his stipulation, made in open court, to be given a narrow construction, where he was a man of affairs with experience in business matters and nothing is made to appear that he was either ignorant or inexperienced, or that any advantage was taken of him, or that he did not fully comprehend the full meaning of his stipulation and the implications necessarily arising therefrom.—Deseret Sav. Investment

The use of the term "investment" in a stipulation with one of the parties to a suit of the manner of the making of the investment implies an actual investment and is inconsistent with the idea of a merely colorable transfer designed to conceal the misappropriation of the money.—Butler v. Walsh, 62 N.Y.S. 913, 48 App.Div. 459, 462.

"Until"

Whether the word "until" as used in a stipulation is a word of inclusion or exclusion cannot be determined by any general rule.—Bantuelle v. Bantuelle, Tex.Civ.App., 195 S.W.2d 686.

it meaningless,²⁸ but every word, clause, and provision thereof should be given effect if possible.²⁹

Good faith. The court will strive to avoid a construction which would make the stipulation deceptive or misleading,³⁰ and will seek an interpretation which is consonant with good faith and honest purpose on the part of the attorneys;³¹ and a construction will not be adopted which will permit of its being used as a trap to the disadvantage of one of the parties.³²

Understanding of one party presumptively known to other. Where the language of one party may be understood in more senses than one, it is to be interpreted in the sense in which he had reason to suppose it was understood by the other party.³³

Practical construction by acts of parties. Where the parties to a stipulation have given a practical construction to it by their acts and conduct, such construction is entitled to great, if not controlling, weight in determining its proper meaning.³⁴

Grammatical construction. Strict grammatical construction will not be permitted to override the manifest intention of the parties.³⁵

Clerical errors and omissions. The stipulation must be read according to the intention of the parties in spite of clerical errors and omissions,³⁶ or the inadvertent use of words.³⁷

Stipulation contradicting evidence in the case will not be construed to mean that the parties agreed to something which was not true.³⁸

Application to situation then existing. Ordinarily a stipulation is to be construed as covering the situation then existing, and not as controlling future conditions not in contemplation.³⁹

b. Subject Matter and Surrounding Circumstances

Stipulations are to be construed with reference to their subject matter and in the light of the surrounding circumstances.

The stipulation is to be interpreted with reference to its subject matter,⁴⁰ and is to be read and construed in the light of the surrounding circumstances⁴¹ and the whole record,⁴² including the state of the pleadings,⁴³ the allegations therein,⁴⁴ the issues involved,⁴⁵ the attitude of the parties in respect of the issues,⁴⁶ and the statutory provisions affecting the subject matter.⁴⁷

c. Construction as a Whole

Stipulations are to be construed as a whole.

A stipulation must be construed as a whole and the intention of the parties collected from the entire instrument, and not from detached or isolated portions.⁴⁸

Several instruments. All the writings, if there are more than one, are to be treated as parts of one instrument and construed together.⁴⁹ Where there is no conflict between them effect will be given to all.⁵⁰

d. Implied Terms and Qualifications

Stipulations are construed according to their terms and the fair implications arising therefrom, but the courts are disinclined to imply reservations or qualifications which could readily have been inserted if the parties had so intended.

When the language is plain and free from ambiguity, the understanding of the parties must be ascertained from its terms,⁵¹ and then whatever those terms fairly imply will be deemed embraced within it.⁵² However, the courts are strongly disinclined to import into an unqualified stipulation reservations or qualifications which might readily have been inserted by the parties if such had been their intention.⁵³ In any event it is never permissible for a court to do violence to a stipulation and indulge an inference of fact in direct contradiction to its express terms.⁵⁴

§ 12. Operation and Effect in General

Stipulations are the equivalent of proof and prevent an independent examination by a judicial officer or body with respect to the matters stipulated; they may be controlling in a subsequent action or trial of the cause and on appeal.

A stipulation, although it is not itself evidence,⁵⁵ is the equivalent of, and may be relied on as, proof,⁵⁶ and to the extent that it is given effect it prevents any independent examination by a judicial officer or body with respect to the matters stipulated.⁵⁷

In subsequent action or trial or other cause. It has been held that stipulations may be made for a single trial or made generally.⁵⁸ There is considerable diversity of holding as to the effect of stipulations on a subsequent trial of the same cause. This diversity of holding is due to some extent, but not altogether, to the nature of the subject matter and to the provisions of the particular stipulation in suit.⁵⁹ A stipulation by an attorney in one

Place of recording instrument

Stipulation admitting instrument was duly recorded was admission that instrument was recorded in proper place, since phrase "duly recorded" means recorded according to law.—Blaisdell Automobile Co. v. Nelson, 154 A. 184, 130 Me. 167.

Reason claims not lienable

Where the parties stipulated that claims of a company were not lienable under statute giving lien for services or materials to be used or consumed in making public improvements or performing public work, the court would assume either that the parties regarded the claims as without the statute, or that claims arose before amendment of statute.—Morris F. Fox & Co. v. State, 281 N.W. 666, 229 Wis. 44.

Extrinsic facts may determine

Although a stipulation itself is not limited to a single trial, facts may be placed before the court in a second trial to show the circumstances under which stipulation was made in order to determine whether stipulation was for a limited or general use.—App v. Class, supra.

59. Labor board proceeding

A representation proceeding conducted by National Labor Relations Board and proceeding on board's complaint subsequently filed could not be separated, and a stipulation which was filed in representation proceeding and formed basis of board's finding therein concerning interstate activities of employer could be considered in determining board's jurisdiction in complaint proceeding.—*National Labor Relations Board v. action will not bind his client or assignee in another, unless there is express acquiescence in the stipulation in the second action.⁶⁰ Also a stipulation by a party in one proceeding will not bind him in a different proceeding in which the parties are not the same.⁶¹ A stipulation, however, may be available against a party in another action or proceeding, although not conclusive of the matter involved.⁶²

On appeal. When a party by a stipulation makes a concession or adopts a theory on which his cause of action is determined, he must abide by it on appeal.⁶³

§ 13. Conclusiveness in General

Valid stipulations are controlling and conclusive as to all matters properly contained, and necessarily included, therein, but they are not controlling as to matters not covered thereby or matters which are not the proper subject of stipulation.

As a general rule stipulations are conclusive as to all matters properly contained, and necessarily included, therein,⁶⁴ and which are an essential part

Evidence to disprove stipulated facts not admissible see infra § 24.

Based on authority of court

A stipulation between litigants disposing of questions involved and made under supervision of court or of the stipulation.⁶⁵ Ordinarily a party will not be permitted to contradict a stipulation,⁶⁶ even though it is contrary to fact,⁶⁷ and even though the stipulation affects the statutory and constitutional rights of the parties thereto.⁶⁸ The court may dispose of a pending cause on the basis of a stipulation for the compromise and settlement of the issues thereof,⁶⁹ and a stipulation is binding with whatever force and effect a proceeding in court may have.⁷⁰ It has been stated that whether a stipulation in open court becomes binding and controlling depends on the circumstances under which it is made.⁷¹ If parties stipulate to do or not to do a thing they ordinarily are bound thereby,⁷² and a stipulation authorizing the court to determine all issues on the pleadings, depositions, and exceptions to the depositions, binds the parties thereto.⁷³

Stipulations are not binding on the parties and are not controlling as to matters which are not necessarily included therein,⁷⁴ or as to matters which are expressly excluded therefrom;⁷⁵ and a stipulation wholly prospective in its operation will not constitute a waiver of any rights or claims accruing prior to its execution.⁷⁶ Also a stipulation which exceeds the power of the parties will not control their rights.⁷⁷ Generally a stipulation is not of court's representative derives effect from the control of the court rather than from any virtue in the stipulation itself.—Perley v. Bailey, 199 A. 570, 80 N.H. 359.

Controls remedies

Where action is settled by stipulation which provides for payment when fees are collected or the estate is settled the parties' remedies are required to be based on that stipulation.—Simon v. Sugarman, 6 N.Y. S.2d 19.

Matter held not legal conclusion

Portion of stipulation of corporations that they were controlled by one person was not a conclusion of law so as not to be binding on corporations in determining whether they constituted an employer under common control provisions of Unemploy-

conclusive as to matters of law contained therein;⁷⁸ but a stipulation as to the law of another state has been held binding on the parties, on the basis that the laws of another state are facts and, hence, the stipulation was one of fact, not of law.⁷⁹ In various instances stipulations as to the nature of a transaction have been held not to be binding on the parties.⁸⁰ It has also been held that a stipulation of counsel originally designed to expedite the trial should not be rigidly adhered to when it becomes apparent that it may inflict a manifest injustice on one of the contracting parties.⁸¹

A final judgment of a federal court in a case involving title to realty, rather than a stipulation in the record in that case, will be looked to in order to determine the rights of the parties.⁸² Where it appears that the parties have stipulated or acquiesced in the proceedings in a court of general jurisdiction they become bound by the judgment entered.⁸³ In a prosecution of two persons accused of crime, represented by different attorneys, a stipulation whereby it is agreed that the stipulations, motions, and objections of each attorney on behalf of one accused shall be considered as made on behalf of the other is applicable to the ordinary procedure of the trial, and not to constitutional rights of those accused.⁸⁴ Parties in probate proceedings who through counsel have stipulated for the time and manner of examination of subscribing witnesses are not thereby disabled from moving that the appearance of one of the parties be stricken from the record because of such party's lack of interest in the litigation.⁸⁵

Notwithstanding contra state decision

A stipulation as to the law of a foreign state was held binding on the parties notwithstanding a decision of the highest court of such state to the contrary made after the stipulation was entered.—Keeler v. Templeton, supra.

80. Particular transactions

(1) Stipulation by government that transaction was a loan in proceeding to determine whether it was a loan or a sale for purpose of taxation was held not to bind government where its intention in conceding that transaction was a loan was merely a concession that it was such merely in form.—Old Colony Trust Associates v. Hasset, C.C.A.Mass., 150 F.2d 179.

(2) Stipulation of counsel that contract is a conditional sale contract was held not to preclude it being considered a bailment lease where on its face and by its terms it clearly is such.—W. K. Wetherill & Co. v. Scheffel, 18 A.2d 680, 144 Pa.Super. 165.

acted on by the judge,⁹² and a stipulation which appears fair and reasonable and is spread on the record with the consent and approval of the court.⁹³ A stipulation has been held binding on the government,⁹⁴ on assignees of the parties,⁹⁵ on parties by class representation,⁹⁶ and on persons accused of crime.⁹⁷ Where an administrator represents the heirs, a stipulation to which the administrator is a party is binding on the heirs.⁹⁸ Although a stipulation provides that neither party shall be prejudiced thereby, the court may consider it where both parties in their evidence and in their arguments refer to it and its effect.⁹⁹

The general rule is well settled, however, that parties cannot by stipulation affect any rights but their own,¹ and that persons not parties to the stipulation are not bound thereby.² The rights of parties to the action who do not join in the stipulation,³ or of persons not parties to the action,⁴ or of parties the stipulation does not purport to bind,⁵ or whose rights are expressly reserved by its terms,⁶ are not bound by the stipulation; and this is especially true where the rights of those not made parties involve a matter of public interest.⁷ Stipulations between the state and those accused in criminal cases will not affect the rights of third persons in civil proceedings.⁸

it is proper to refuse to allow a stipulation that plaintiff had received a certain sum of money from the other tort-feasor in consideration of plaintiff's execution of a covenant not to sue to be read to the jury.⁹

Attorney. Where a client changes attorneys during the progress of a proceeding, the successor attorney is not bound with respect to attorney's fees by a stipulation entered into by his predecessor.¹⁰ A person signing a stipulation as attorney for one of the parties is bound not to interfere with the performance of it.¹¹

Interveners. Stipulations entered into by the original parties have been held binding not only on them, but on others coming into the case by intervention.¹²

Purchasers of realty. In an action to recover land, a stipulation between the original parties is binding on those who purchase from defendants pending suit, and later become parties thereto.¹³ Also, one who purchases realty from the purchaser at a mortgage foreclosure sale is bound by a stipulation of the grantors with respect to the boundary made in open court in a prior mechanic's lien suit affecting the realty.¹⁴

Authenticity of writings. Where certain defendants by a stipulation admit the authenticity and genuineness of particular writings, it has been held that nonstipulating defendants are bound by such admissions until they disprove authenticity.¹⁵

§ 15. — Persons under Disability

Generally stipulations which are favorable to a person under disability or which merely facilitate the determination of the case will be enforced, but stipulations which surrender substantial rights or are adverse or disadvantageous to his interests will not be enforced.

It has been stated broadly in some decisions that stipulations may be binding on persons who are incapable of binding themselves by contract out of court,¹⁶ but the decisions are not in entire harmony as to the character of stipulations which will be upheld and the circumstances under which they will be upheld.

Persons non compos mentis. A stipulation of settlement, made in the course of litigation, will be enforced against a mentally incompetent defendant, where it was the result of considerable negotiation and the interests of defendant were well cared for.¹⁷ Also, it has been held that, where a review is granted on the petition of a guardian of a party who became insane after the trial, on a stipulation entered into by the guardian that no objection would be made to defendant's testifying generally on the trial of the case in review, the stipulation is binding on the legal representatives of petitioner after his decease.¹⁸

Infants. While it has been broadly stated that no person has any authority to stipulate in behalf of a minor,¹⁹ and that infant defendants are not bound by a stipulation as to facts,²⁰ the general rule is that the next friend or guardian ad litem of an infant may give a binding assent to such arrangements as will facilitate the determination of the case in which the rights of the infant are involved,²¹ this rule being subject to the limitation that the stipulation be approved and ratified by the court, on a showing that it is for the interest, or, at least, not prejudicial to the interest, of the infant.²² However, a guardian ad litem or next friend cannot, in any event, by stipulations, surrender substantial rights of the infant;²³ and stipulations and admissions of fact which are adverse

Distribution of fund from death claim

In distribution of sum realized in settlement without court approval of a claim arising from death under the provisions of the Federal Employers' Liability Act, the court is not bound by an agreement between counsel for administratrix and counsel for guardian of decedent's child as to the share of the fund which should go to the child.—In re Walker's Estate, 94 Pittsb.Leg.J. 179, 57 Pa.Dist. & Co. 496.

and disadvantageous to the interests of infant defendants are not authoritative with respect to the determination of their rights.²⁴

Married women. It has been held that counsel representing a party litigant may represent his client in stipulating for a consent verdict, although the client is a married woman,²⁵ and also that a married woman defendant, who, by statute, can appear in person, or by attorney, and defend herself, or in conjunction with her husband, as the case may be, is bound by a stipulation to abide the event of another suit.²⁶

§ 16. Persons in Whose Favor Operative

A stipulation is available to the parties thereto, unless by its terms it is restricted to the benefit of only some of the parties, but is not available to parties to the action who are not parties to it, or to persons who are not parties to the action.

A stipulation is equally available to all of the parties thereto,²⁷ unless the stipulation by its terms restricts its benefit to one of the parties alone,²⁸ but is not available in favor of a party to the action who is not a party to the stipulation,²⁹ or to persons who are not parties to the action;³⁰ and a stipulation between plaintiff and some of defendants does not affect his rights as to the other defendants.³¹ Ordinarily the courts should enforce an agreement between accused in a criminal case and a county attorney, where accused, in good faith and in reliance on the county attorney's representations, has executed his part of the agreement.³² Where, in proceedings against the state board of tax commissioners to review assessments, it was stipulated that the successful party should be entitled to tax as costs the stenographer's fees, a motion by a city as intervener, which was awarded costs in the final order, for a retaxation of costs for copies of the stenographer's minutes furnished to counsel for the intervener and to the attorney-general should be granted.³³

§ 17. Conclusive Effect on Court

Ordinarily courts are bound by, and must enforce, stipulations in respect of matters which may validly be made the subject matter of stipulations.

and official referees to whom the cases are referred,³⁷ are bound by stipulations in respect of matters which may validly be made the subject matter of stipulations. Courts are bound to enforce stipulations which parties may validly make,³⁸ where they are not unreasonable or against good morals or sound public policy.³⁹ Ordinarily they have no power to strike out stipulations on their own motion without consent of the parties,⁴⁰ or to abridge or amend such stipulations,⁴¹ or modify or alter them in any material detail against objection of the parties,⁴² or go beyond the terms thereof,⁴³ or to make findings contrary to the terms of a stipulation,⁴⁴ or render a judgment not authorized by its terms.⁴⁵

On the other hand, all stipulations are not necessarily binding on the courts, and under the circumstances of a particular case they may be justified in disregarding them.⁴⁶ A court cannot be deprived by stipulation of its power to give equitable relief,⁴⁷ and where the stipulation relates to matters

Truth of stipulated fact

(1) A court examining questions may properly, and at times is duty bound to, find the fact set up in a stipulation to be untrue.—Macklin v. Kaiser Co., D.C.Or., 69 F.Supp. 137.

Life expectancy

In determining whether jury's verdict, awarding damages for wrongful death, was excessive, trial court had right to compute life expectancy in accordance with federal census bureau's mortality table, printed in World Almanac, despite parties' stipulation that earlier American mortality table allotted shorter life expectancy.—Foerster v. Direito, 170 P.2d 986, 75 Cal.App.2d 328.

Stipulation held not controlling

Supreme court is not controlled by stipulation of parties that if court should direct writ of certiorari to issue, record before court should be considered as returned pursuant to writ, so that merits of controversy may be immediately determined.—Grant Lunch Corporation v. Driscoll, 29 A.2d 888, 129 N.J.Law 408, affirmed 33 A.2d 900, 130 N.J.Law 554, certiorari denied 64 S.Ct. 431, 320 U.S. 801, 88 L.Ed. 484.

in which the court has discretion and for which it is responsible it will carefully consider the matter and decide on the basis of the facts and the law.⁴⁸ A stipulation entered into between counsel which materially affects the conduct of litigation, the relevancy of testimony, the number of witnesses used, and the time to be consumed in trying the matter is subject to the consent of the judge of the court involved.⁴⁹ A court is not bound by, and will not enforce, a stipulation which the parties cannot validly make,⁵⁰ which imposes a nonjudicial function on the court,⁵¹ which purports to confer jurisdiction not otherwise possessed,⁵² which is contrary to statutes intended to promote the public safety,⁵³ or which will violate established principles of procedure.⁵⁴ A stipulation for the submission of a cause as though arguments had been prepared and filed on certiorari is not binding on the reviewing court,⁵⁵ since the court is entitled to know what propositions are relied on by petitioner to sustain the writ directed to the reviewing court and to have such propositions supported by brief in argument.⁵⁶ Further, courts ordinarily are not controlled or bound by agreements of counsel on questions of law,⁵⁷ although in some instances courts have been held bound thereby.⁵⁸

A court is not precluded from adopting findings on issues not determined by a stipulation of facts,⁵⁹ and, hence, it is authorized to adopt findings not in conflict with a stipulation on other issues necessary to the determination of the rights of other litigants who failed to sign the stipulation.⁶⁰ A stipulation by the parties in probate proceedings as to the time and manner of examination of subscribing witnesses will not bar the court from excluding a party from the proceedings who has no interest in the litigation.⁶¹ It has been held that an appellate court cannot take judicial notice of estate proceedings, even though under a stipulation the lower court was enabled to do so.⁶²

§ 18. Conclusiveness and Effect of Particular Stipulations

The general principles discussed supra §§ 1-17 have been applied in determining the conclusiveness and effect of particular stipulations or types of stipulations, as considered infra §§ 19-29.

48. Injunction

(1) On application for injunction, court will carefully consider language of injunction, even though stipulated, and may sign injunction as stipulated or may require testimony.—Bowles v. Hudspeth, D.C.Or., 62 F.Supp. 803.

(2) On price administrator's application for entry of judgment for stipulated sum and injunction, money judgment was entered and jurisdiction and decision as to injunction would be reserved pending determination of peacetime policy with respect to continuance of price control in lumber industry.—Bowles v. § 19. — To Abide Event

As a general rule a stipulation to abide the event of another suit is binding as long as the causes of action remain the same; it operates as a waiver of the right of trial by jury, and forecloses all questions which might have been, but were not, presented in the other case. "Final judgment," in such a stipulation, means final determination of the action.

General rules governing the construction of stipulations, discussed supra § 11, apply in determining the construction of a stipulation to abide the event of another suit.⁶³ Likewise, general rules as to the operation and effect of stipulations, discussed supra §§ 12-17, apply in determining the operation and effect of such a stipulation.⁶⁴ The stipulation is binding as long as the causes of action remain the same, although the pleadings are amended;⁶⁵ but the parties may, by their subsequent actions, indicating that they have ceased to rely on the stipulation.⁶⁶ The stipulation operates as a waiver of the right of trial by jury,⁶⁷ cuts off all defenses to the suit in which the stipulation is made,⁶⁸ except as defendant may question the amount to be adjudged against him,⁶⁹ and forecloses all questions which might have been, but were not, presented in the other case.⁷⁰ On the other hand, a stipulation providing for following the judgment in another pending suit should not be sustained where such other suit presents wholly extraneous and irrelevant issues, unless such result was clearly intended.⁷¹ Where a stipulation is made to abide the result of a cause without requiring it to be determined on the merits, a judgment in the cause will operate as an estoppel between the parties to the agreement, although the judgment was one as in case of nonsuit.⁷²

Offer of evidence

Where agreement by defendants'

counsel that decision in one case should control other cases admitted similarity of facts, plaintiff, in order to recover, was not required to offer evidence, where plaintiff in first case prevailed.—Savage v. Dorn, Tex.Civ. App., 60 S.W.2d 312, error refused.

Counterclaim

Where parties agreed that decision on counterclaim should follow decision on counterclaim in another case, and counterclaim in latter case was decided adversely to counterclaimant, counterclaim must be dismissed in pending case.—Aluminum Co. of America v. Deprivation of defense in admiralty

Where admiralty suits were consolidated, to be tried with another suit arising out of same collision, and proctors stipulated that consolidated case should abide decision of such other case, party in consolidated action was not deprived of defense under Harter Act.—The Cockatoo, C.C. Waiver of garnishee's legal rights

Correspondence between parties to garnishment proceeding with respect to holding it in abeyance until determination of question whether garnishee would be required to pay damages in tort to judgment debtor, which correspondence provided that neither party should waive any rights, did not carry over effect of garnishment summons until judgment was rendered on tort claim, since that would be a decided waiver of one of the garnishee's legal rights.—Lewis v. Only similar issues controlled

Stipulation that issues in suit for cargo damage should be controlled by appellate court decision in suit for other cargo damage on same voyage was held to control similar issues only and did not preclude admission of any evidence or limit recovery to percentage of damages.—The Carso, C.C.A.N.Y., 69 F.2d 824, certiorari denied Navigazione Libera Triestina Societa Anonyme v. Monahos, 54 S.Ct. 781, 292 U.S. 647, 78 L.Ed. 1497, and Navigazione Libera Triestina Societa Anonyme v. F. Romeo & Co., 54 S.Ct. 782, 292 U.S. 647, 78 L.Ed. 1497.

Stipulation, in will contest, for following judgment in pending companion suit to set aside testator's transfer of stock, should not be given effect where judgment in companion suit was based, not on undue influence, but on subsequent amendment asserting trust.—Huegel v. Huegel, 46 S.W.2d 157, 329 Mo. 571.

72. N.Y.—Brown v. Sprague, 5 Den. 545.

To abide "final judgment" or "final decision." The expression "final judgment," as used in a stipulation to abide the event, is synonymous with the expression "final determination of the action," and such determination is not reached until the final settling of the rights of the action of the parties beyond all appeal.⁷³ Where a stipulation is made that on final judgment in a case appealed either party might enter judgment in another case corresponding to the final judgment in the case appealed, the stipulation does not become functus officio when the judgment in the case appealed was reversed on the ground of error in overruling a demurrer to the complaint, and, where the pleadings in that case are thereupon amended without making any substantial change in the issues and a final judgment obtained on the merits, a judgment corresponding thereto may be entered in the other case.⁷⁴ Within an agreement that final decision in an interference proceeding shall be controlling between the parties thereto with respect to the issues involved therein, the decision of the court of customs and patent appeals, to which the decree of the board of appeals of the patent office is appealed, is a final decision.⁷⁵

Determination of cause in appellate court. Where it is stipulated that a suit shall abide the "determination" of another cause in the appellate court, there is a determination of the other suit, within the meaning of the stipulation, where the appeal was dismissed because appellant's brief did not comply with the rules of court.⁷⁶ A stipulation that, in the event that the court reverses judgment in a similar case pending appeal and the higher court denies a hearing, the court shall reverse the judgment in the present case will be given effect.⁷⁷ So, a judgment should be reversed in accordance with the court's views expressed in another case, where the parties stipulate that the cases involve the same questions and that the decision in such other case shall control, and the record supports the stipulation.⁷⁸ Where parties have two suits pending in the same court at the same time, and they file a stipulation of record that the same judgment shall be entered in the second suit as shall have been entered in the first suit, and that in the event of an appeal the same disposition may be made of the second suit as is made of the first suit, and on appeal the judgment in the first suit is reversed, the appellate court will reverse the judgment in the second suit.⁷⁹ Where an appeal has been taken, and the parties stipulate that the opinion of the court in another case, pending the appeal, is decisive of the questions involved, the court may, where the authorities agreed on reasonably support the action, render an opinion in accordance with the stipulation.⁸⁰ In an action on a claim against an estate, a stipulation that the trial shall remain in abeyance until a decision is rendered on the appeal from the judgment obtained by claimant against deceased waives defendant's right to claim that the judgment on which the claim is based is not final, and that hence the suit was premature.⁸¹

Matters excepted from agreement. Where there are two or more actions pending, and pleadings are made up as to certain issues, and the parties stipulate that the law as finally held in the one case tried shall control in the other cases, and be conclusive as to all matters in the cases not yet tried, "except as to matters of fact upon which issue may be joined therein," such stipulation does not preclude either party, after the one case has been finally disposed of, from raising other issues of fact by proper pleadings, on leave of the court.⁸²

Judgment may be entered without notice by trial judge, on learning the result of a test case, under a stipulation suspending the decision of a case tried before him, until the decision of an appellate court can be had in a pending case, and it is not necessary that he should have read the decision in such pending case.⁸³

§ 20. — For Dismissal, Discontinuance, Reinstatement, or Revival

Stipulations for dismissal or discontinuance must be fairly and reasonably construed, in the light of the surrounding circumstances and the result sought. A formal order by the court is not necessary to the efficacy of such a stipulation.

Stipulations for the dismissal or discontinuance of a suit must be given a fair and reasonable construction,⁸⁵ and interpreted in the light of the circumstances surrounding the parties and in view of the result which the parties were attempting to accomplish.⁸⁶ So, where plaintiff suing for personal injuries and defendant's insurer stipulate to discontinue the action on payment of a certain sum, and subsequently judgment is entered for plaintiff, the stipulation is binding on the parties, and plaintiff cannot recover on the judgment.⁸⁷ A stipulation for dismissal of a suit for specific performance of a contract ends the suit;⁸⁸ and, where the parties to an action in which judgment is rendered enter into an agreement, while an appeal is pending, for the execution of papers discontinuing the appeal and the action, all previous proceedings are annulled and the judgment is not res judicata in a subsequent action.⁸⁹ A stipulation for the dismissal of an action does not affect any rights not asserted in the complaint.⁹⁰ A stipulation for discontinuance entered into before trial does not authorize the entry of a judgment as on the merits, such as would bar a subsequent action for the same cause;⁹¹ but it has been held that a stipulation for a discontinuance entered into after judgment includes by consequence the vacation of the judgment.⁹²

Necessity of order of discontinuance or dismissal. Where a stipulation for discontinuance is filed, it operates as a discontinuance until set aside, without any formal order of discontinuance by the court;⁹³ and where, in an action against several, a stipulation is entered into whereby the interests of all defendants except one are adjusted, no formal order of dismissal as to the parties to the stipulation is necessary to make a judgment against the one defendant valid.⁹⁴

Practice and rules governing motion

Where the court and counsel had an understanding, at argument of motion to dismiss, that decision would be under the federal court practice then prevalent, new procedural rules governing the motion, which became effective before motion was ruled on, would not be made applicable by the court's delay in deciding it.—Leach v. trial by jury was reversed and motion granted, where parties stipulated that counterclaim for declaratory judgment, and defenses to such counterclaim, be withdrawn on the merits and that certain defendants be withdrawn as parties.—De Puy v. Miller, 77 N.Y.S.2d 266, 273 App.Div. 905.

Effect of question as to release

Where injured employee signed stipulation for dismissal of his action in connection with a release, and there was a jury question as to whether release was signed on a condition which was not fulfilled, and employee's attorney filed release and dismissal with the clerk for purpose of tendering documents to employer and using them as exhibits in case, employer could not rely on such stipulation to sustain a motion to dismiss.—Kelley v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., 177 S.W.2d 435, 352 Mo. 301, certiorari denied 64 S.Ct. 1055, 322 U.S. 738, 88 L.Ed. 1572.

Discontinuance on merits

Stipulation to settle and discontinue cause on merits rests on no better basis than receipt or release, and its validity may be determined in action to enforce original cause of action, notwithstanding stipulation is annexed to order discontinuing action and does not recite that it is on merits.—Johnson v. Antonopoulos, 210 N.Y.S. 589, 213 App.Div. 324.

Stipulation for revival. Where a verdict was rendered for plaintiff, and judgment entered thereon, and pending a motion for a new trial he died, a stipulation suggesting his death, consenting to the revival in the name of his administratrix, reserving to defendant the same objections to the revivor that he might make if it had been "pursuant to statute" instead of stipulation, it has been held that, under the stipulation which is to be taken in its broadest significance when objected to for the first time on appeal, no objections are saved to defendant.⁹⁶

§ 21. — As to Pleadings

- a. In general
- b. Amendments
- c. Extending time to plead

a. In General

Stipulations as to pleadings are to be construed in accordance with their spirit and in furtherance of justice, and are conclusive of all matters necessarily included therein.

As in the case of stipulations generally, discussed supra § 11, stipulations relating to pleadings are not to be construed technically, but rather in accordance with their spirit and in furtherance of justice.⁹⁷ Subject to limitations applicable to stipulations generally, discussed supra § 12, a stipulation with regard to the pleadings operates by way of estoppel against the parties thereto and is conclusive of all matters necessarily included therein,⁹⁸ but not of matters not so included,⁹⁹ such as a mere legal conclusion not warranted by the facts pleaded;¹ and a stipulation as to the pleadings on the first trial has been held not to be binding on the hearing after the cause is remanded.² After a ruling by the trial judge, the parties cannot make a new case for themselves by a "stipulation on appeal," seeking to incorporate matter into the bill.³

Grounds of demurrer which are cured by a stipulation of the parties should be overruled.⁴

Matters admissible under general issue or general denial. Where the parties stipulate that defendant may, under the general issue or general denial, introduce any evidence admissible under proper pleadings, the stipulation will be held to include both affirmative and negative pleas;⁵ and under such a Petition as complaint demurred to

Where party stipulated that in event court granted leave to citizen to commence action to test legality of appointment of state officer petition should be considered as a complaint to which opposing party demurred, on determination that action was properly brought, stipulation became effective and petition would be so considered.—State ex rel. Martin v. Ekern, 280 N.W. 393, 228 Wis. 645.

Stipulation as equivalent to personal service

(1) In proceeding wherein defendants were not served with summons, a stipulation under which they were allowed a certain length of time to answer was equivalent to personal service and return of the summons as of the date the stipulation was filed.—Merner Lumber Co. v. Silvey, 84 P.2d 1062, 29 Cal.App.2d 426.

(2) Where stipulation making successor administrator a party defendant declared that pleadings and issues as joined should govern trial and that all the allegations of the complaint should apply to successor administrator, in so far as the interests of the estate were concerned, it was not necessary to serve summons and complaint on him.—Funston v. Little, 25 N.W.2d 92, 75 N.D. 60.

Sufficiency of petition

In view of agreement, sufficiency of petition was required to be determined by facts shown by evidence and defendants' pleadings; truth of allegation could not be presumed, as against general demurrer, where plaintiffs agreed that sufficiency of petition should be determined on evidence and all pleadings.—Murski v. Kowalski, Tex.Civ.App., 45 S.W.2d 747.

60 C.J. p 71 note 82.

Sufficiency of prior pleadings and proceedings

Stipulation that court, in ruling on demurrer, might consider pleadings and proceedings in a previous action without prejudice to plaintiff's right to object to legal irrelevancy and insufficiency of the former pleadings and proceedings did not preclude him from raising question that former pleadings and proceedings were insufficient to justify any ruling on the instant demurrer.—Pierce v. Schroeder, 232 P.2d 460, 171 Kan. 259.

stipulation it is the duty of the court to permit any matter of fact to go to the jury which tends to establish any proper defense.⁶ It has similarly been held that, where the parties pleaded in short, by consent, the general issue, "with leave to give in evidence any matter which, if well pleaded, would be admissible in defense of the action," a special plea of waiver is not required to authorize the admission in evidence of waiver;⁷ but a stipulation that defendant be permitted to have "all competent defenses under the general denial" embraces only such defenses as were competent in bar, and does not authorize a defense in abatement for a defect of parties plaintiff not appearing on the face of the complaint.⁸ A stipulation that defendant might introduce proof of all matters under the plea of the general issue that might be offered had they been specially pleaded does not cover such pleas as are required by special practice statutes to be verified by affidavit.⁹

Particular stipulations in respect of pleadings. In addition to the stipulations relating to pleadings already discussed, or to be discussed, in this section, among others¹⁰ that have received construction by the courts are stipulations eliminating a claim of variance;¹¹ withdrawing particular allegations, so as to change the nature of the action;¹² submitting a case on an affidavit of defense;¹³ submitting issues in consolidated actions;¹⁴ withdrawing a plea of the general issue, so that trial may be had on the issue raised by a special plea;¹⁵ or waiving pleadings¹⁶ or their sufficiency.¹⁷ A stipulation that, if the court should take jurisdiction of the controversy, it should determine the case on the facts stated in the petition and the return thereto has the effect of a motion for judgment on the pleadings.¹⁸

Stipulations as to amendments to pleadings, as with respect to the time for, or withdrawal of, amendments, have been construed, or given effect, in accordance with principles governing stipulations generally.

Where, after the cause is placed on the trial calendar, the parties stipulate that all parties may file amended pleadings as they desire, the stipulation constitutes a waiver of objection to the amendment of the complaint so as to set up an action based on fraud instead of one for an accounting pursuant to contract;¹⁹ and under a stipulation allowing defendant to amend a plea after judgment overruling his demurrer, and providing that such leave shall not embrace the right to file new pleas, defendant is not precluded from asking leave of the court to file new pleas.²⁰ Where defendant proceeds to trial and agrees that all objections to the pleadings shall be taken under advisement by the court, such course reserves to either party the right to file trial amendments, within the discretion of the trial court, necessary to conform to the issues as made by the pleadings and proof.²¹ Under a stipulation providing that the declaration should be considered as amended by the addition of such counts in tort as the state of facts brought out at the trial should justify, the amendments were limited to counts in tort.²² A stipulation that the pleadings shall be deemed amended to conform to the facts as found by the court will not preclude the losing party from questioning the sufficiency of the findings or of the evidence to support them.²³ Where evidence was inadmissible under the original answer, but the court at the trial gave leave to defendant to file an amended answer, which was not then filed, and no leave was granted to file it later, the parties could not bind the court by a provision, in a stipulation subsequently made that a supplemental answer materially changing the issues might be filed, and considered as filed prior to the trial, and thereby require the appellate court to determine questions never determined by the trial court.²⁴

The agreement of defendant's counsel, in a bail trover action, to waive objection to a proffered amendment of the suit to include proper parties does not constitute a waiver of defendant's right to move for a restitution judgment on voluntary dismissal of the action by plaintiff.²⁵ A stipulation not to amend a pleading, when clearly intended only to avoid delaying the trial, does not prevent the court from granting an amendment at the trial in furtherance of justice.²⁶

Amendment of a libel may be held permissible under a stipulation.²⁷ So, a libellant will be given leave to file an amended libel in accordance with the terms of an agreement, at a conference in chambers, between libellant and claimants of the vessel.²⁸

A statement of claim may, in accordance with a stipulation, be treated as amended.²⁹

Time for amendment. A stipulation that an amendment may be made at any time before the cause is set for trial, subject to any legal objections, does not cover an amendment not tendered until after the cause has been set for trial.³⁰ Where the parties stipulate that plaintiff may have as much time as he may require to file an amended declaration, defendant, feeling that plaintiff is taking too much time, should appeal to the court to fix a time limit, and notify plaintiff of such request, or notify plaintiff of the time when he would request the court to enter judgment.³¹

Withdrawal of amendments. A stipulation to the effect that amendments to the declaration are withdrawn and excluded from the record, and will not be interposed on a jury retrial ordered by the court, and that the declaration will remain in full force and effect for the retrial, does not provide for a retrial without regard to the sufficiency of the declaration.³²

Effect of amendment on motion to strike. Where plaintiff moves to strike out part of the answer, and defendant's counter motion to amend is granted, plaintiff's request that the answer as amended be deemed one of the pleadings, as though specified in his notice of motion, will be regarded as a stipulation, so that no new motion is necessary, the amended answer being regarded as defendant's pleading on the motion.³³

A stipulation extending the time to plead will be given effect according to its terms.

A stipulation extending time to "answer" gives defendant the right, within that time, to demur,³⁴ or to make a motion to dismiss³⁵ or to strike;³⁶ but a stipulation extending the time to plead, provided defendant pleads on the merits, does not give the right to demur.³⁷ If a stipulation extending the time to answer includes a provision that defendant may make such application as he may be advised, a motion to strike out parts of the complaint is proper.³⁸ A stipulation that defendant would file an answer in a few days after default day, containing a general demurrer and a general denial, does not preclude him on the same day and before the filing of such answer from filing a plea of privilege.³⁹ A stipulation extending the time to answer gives the time stipulated in addition to the unexpired period existing when the agreement is executed;⁴⁰ and a stipulation not expressly extending the time to file an answer, but providing that it may be filed on being signed by defendant's attorney in fact, gives defendant a reasonable time to file his answer.⁴¹

Where a defendant signs a stipulation purporting to extend his time to answer, but actually requiring answer in less than the statutory time, and there is no consideration for the stipulation, he has the right to avail himself of the full statutory time.⁴² The last day is included, under a stipulation extending the time to plead "until" a certain date, if, from the context, it appears to have been intended as inclusive of the last date.⁴³ Where a stipulation provided that plaintiff's time to reply or demur to any of the defenses set up in the answer served, which contained a counterclaim and special matter in defense, and to make any motion with reference to the answer, should be extended if defendant should elect not to serve an amended answer, no amended answer having been served, plaintiff is entitled to reply to defendant's counterclaim and to make any proper motion with respect to the other defenses set up in the answer within the time specified.⁴⁴

Acts of parties as aiding construction. If a stipulation extending the regular time to plead is of doubtful meaning, the acts of the parties in the further conduct of the proceedings may be resorted to in determining the intent of the parties.⁴⁵

Court rule inapplicable. A court rule providing the conditions on which a private agreement between parties as to the proceedings shall be binding if either party denies the agreement does not apply where plaintiff does not deny at least some manner of agreement for extension of time for defendant to answer or plead.⁴⁶

Claim of limitations barred

Where brothers in partition suit stipulated to have chancellor hear their claims pertaining to mother's estate, and the chancellor had jurisdiction of the subject matter and the parties, stipulation barred any claim that notes were barred by limitations.—Herbolsheimer v. Herbolsheimer, 53 N.E.2d 18, 321 Ill.App. 285.

not be permitted to depart therefrom.⁴⁹ So, the court is without power to go beyond the stipulation of issues made by the parties,⁵⁰ and undertake to pass on⁵¹ or submit⁵² issues withdrawn or excluded from consideration; nor can error be predicated on the failure of the court to submit to the jury an issue covered by a stipulation.⁵³ On the other hand, neither party may complain of the action of the court in submitting any of the issues agreed on;⁵⁴ and a stipulation of counsel, in the course of a trial, with relation to a valid issue in the case may be accepted as foundation for a finding of fact.⁵⁵ If defendant binds himself to defend only on a certain ground, plaintiff need not prove facts not essential to entitle him to recover as against the defense so limited.⁵⁶ A stipulation that only one issue, or only particular issues, are involved authorizes entry of judgment for the one party or the other according as the fact and the issues are decided.⁵⁷ Where parties stipulated that a plea of privilege should be determined on contract and petition, allegations of the petition were admitted as established only for the purpose of determining venue.⁵⁸ Where the parties stipulated that all the issues presented by the pleadings may be submitted for trial and determination, the court properly tried all the issues presented by the complaint and by the cross complaint, although the cross complaint was an improper pleading and could have been eliminated.⁵⁹

Issues litigated by consent. Where the facts are stipulated and no objection is made to the consideration of any of such facts under the pleadings, whatever issues are presented by the stipulated facts must be considered as having been litigated by consent.⁶⁰

Rate as basis of recovery

Where complaint sought recovery authority a stipulation by the parties as to the issues in the case does not waive the objection that the complaint is insufficient to state a cause of action, this being a question of law as to which no valid agreement can be made.⁶³

Effect of amendment of pleadings. A stipulation, in extending the time to answer that the issue was to date as if no extension had been granted, did not prevent the issue from being destroyed by a subsequent amendment of the pleadings, or obviate the necessity of giving a new notice of trial and of filing a new note of issue.⁶⁴ After defendant moves for summary judgment, the service of an amended complaint and an amended answer does not prevent consideration of the motion, where the parties stipulate that the motion is deemed to be made against the amended complaint.⁶⁵ Where the parties stipulate that a single issue shall be the sole one, and the court grants a party leave to amend so as to inject a new and independent issue, the court may nevertheless, in the particular circumstances, not err in restricting the parties to the single issue agreed on.⁶⁶

Availability on subsequent trial or in another case. According to some decisions, a stipulation limiting and defining the issues on which the controversy depends applies only to the trial at which the stipulation is made;⁶⁷ but it has also been held that, unless otherwise provided, the stipulation will govern subsequent trials of the cause.⁶⁸ Where the parties agree that the same issues are presented as were involved in another case, the court may assume a particular fact in view of such agreement.⁶⁹ A broker's stipulation, in his suit for damages for wrongful discharge, that he claims no commission on sales made after a certain date, bars his subsequent suit to recover on sales made after that date to persons whom he allegedly solicited before his discharge.⁷⁰

Evidence admissible under issues. Evidence of facts not within the issues agreed on is not admissible,⁷¹ and cannot be considered on a motion for new trial;⁷² and evidence may be admissible for one purpose, but not for another, according to the issues made by the stipulation.⁷³

b. As Eliminating Other Issues

A stipulation to eliminate a single issue, or particular issues, has no effect on other issues in the case; but a stipulation prescribing the issues on which the case is to be tried waives or eliminates all issues not included.

If the parties stipulate merely to eliminate a single issue, or particular issues, the stipulation has no effect on other issues in the case.⁷⁴ On the other hand, where parties by stipulation prescribe the issues on which the case is to be tried, they are estopped from thereafter asserting that the case was tried or submitted on the wrong theory;⁷⁵ and a stipulation of this nature, unlike a stipulation which merely eliminates a single issue, amounts to a bindon particular rate, but trial proceeded on theory, as disclosed by written stipulation of facts constituting entire evidence in cause, that one or the other of two rates was applicable, permitting of plaintiff to recover at rate not sued on in its complaint was not error, notwithstanding general rule that party must recover on theory of his complaint or not at all.—*Seymour Water Co. v. § 23. — As to Evidence

- a. In general
- b. Conclusiveness on court
- c. Documents in general
- d. Use of copies, records, transcripts, or abstracts of title
- e. Depositions
- f. As to what witnesses would testify

g. As to testimony of witnesses on former trial

a. In General

Stipulations relating to evidence should be fairly and liberally construed, and the parties are bound thereby.

General rules governing the construction, operation, and effect of stipulations, discussed supra §§ 11-17, apply to stipulations relating to, or affecting, evidence.⁷⁷ Parties by their conduct, and especially by their agreements, may make that admissible which might otherwise not have been.⁷⁸ These

Best evidence rule held not to bar evidence admissible under stipulation.—Larson v. A. W. Larson Const. Co., 217 P.2d 789, 36 Wash.2d 271.

Evidence to be considered by trier of facts

A stipulation as to what evidence shall be considered by the trier of facts in deciding a particular question excludes the consideration of other evidence, which may not be considered, even though it may find its way into the record, except where it clearly appears that the parties have abandoned the stipulation.—Lappinen v. Union Ore Co., 29 N.W. 2d 8, 224 Minn. 395.

Purpose for which evidence admitted

Error in limiting purpose for which evidence was admitted was cured where, before close of trial, the successful party agreed that such evidence should be considered as admitted for all purposes, and the judge asked that the record show such agreement.—Traders & General Ins. Co. v. Weatherford, Tex.Civ. App., 124 S.W.2d 423, error dismissed, judgment correct.

Proceedings in prior action

Where counsel stipulated that court should consider part of proceedings in prior action as evidence in determining questions of law before impaneling jury, court could consider entire proceedings.—Stone v. Siegel, 17 Ohio Supp. 131.

stipulations should be construed in the furtherance of justice.⁷⁹ They should not be given a narrow, strict, or technical construction,⁸⁰ but should be given a fair and liberal one,⁸¹ so as to carry out the apparent intention of the parties and permit a fair trial on the merits.⁸² Such a stipulation may, for all practical purposes, be equivalent to the formal introduction of an article in evidence.⁸³

The parties are bound by such stipulations,⁸⁴ as far as they purport to stipulate facts.⁸⁵ Where the parties have given a practical construction to the stipulation by their acts, such construction is entitled to great weight in determining its meaning.⁸⁶ Grammatical construction will not be allowed to override the manifest intent of an instrument.⁸⁷ The principle that the express mention of one thing implies the exclusion of another has sometimes been applied.⁸⁸

Limiting, or dispensing with, proofs. Courts look with favor on a stipulation of parties to limit proofs,⁸⁹ and such a stipulation becomes the law of the case.⁹⁰ There is no reason why proof of a judgment by an exemplified copy may not be dispensed with by the parties;⁹¹ but relevant evidence cannot be kept from the jury by waiver of proof on the point involved.⁹² A stipulation by one accused of crime that there was no form of coercion in a confession excuses the district attorney from proving the voluntariness of the confession.⁹³

Judicial notice. Effect will be given to an informal or tacit agreement of the parties that judicial notice shall be taken of the common law and statutes of another state, including the opinions of the supreme court of that state declaring the common law and construing the statutes.⁹⁴

Exhibits referred to in a stipulation have been held properly considered by the trial court and on appeal.⁹⁵ Where a stipulation that schedules and a statement filed as exhibits with an answer are correct would amount to nothing more than a self-serving declaration, such stipulation is not of itself sufficient to establish the truth of the exhibits.⁹⁶

Expert testimony. A stipulation as to the qualifications of an expert witness is binding on the parties.⁹⁷ Where a party admits the qualifications of witnesses to testify as experts, but does not stipulate that their judgment is to be taken as conclusive, the question of their credibility and the weight to be accorded their testimony remains to be considered by the jury and, later, by the court in passing on motions for a new trial.⁹⁸ A party's agreement to be bound by the testimony of an expert, to be given in the form of a report, does not mean that it is to be accepted as conclusive, but only that he will accept the report for what it is worth, without further examination of the expert.⁹⁹

Testimony of one accused competent against all.

Where two persons were jointly tried for an offense and it was stipulated that all testimony in behalf of either should inure to the benefit of both, evidence in rebuttal that certain evidence given by a witness for one of them was untrue, and that the fact led to an incriminatory inference, was available against the other.¹

Physical examination. Counsel's agreement to examination by two physicians does not preclude defendants from calling other physicians as witnesses.²

Availability on second trial. Where there is nothing in a stipulation relating to the admission of evidence which limits its use to any particular trial, it will be available on a second trial.³

b. Conclusiveness on Court

Valid stipulations as to evidence are binding on the court.

Valid stipulations as to evidence are binding on the court, which is bound to enforce them;⁴ and the court cannot go beyond the terms of the stipulation.⁵ On the other hand, the court is not bound by, and will not enforce, a stipulation which the parties cannot validly make.⁶ So, a stipulation that only such evidence as shall be agreed on by the parties shall be admissible will not be allowed to control the action of the court in the reception of other evidence or to determine the effect to be given to it.⁷

The construction and effect of stipulations relating to letters and other documents have been determined in accordance with principles governing stipulations as to evidence generally.

By stipulating for the production of certain documents, parties must be deemed to have waived any showing of reasonable probability of materiality or else to have concluded that this requirement has been met.⁸ An instrument is not rendered admissible by a stipulation referring to instruments which do not include the one in question.⁹ A letter¹⁰ or a surgeon's written report,¹¹ even though hearsay, may be competent evidence where admitted by stipulation. A stipulation that a letter may be read in evidence does not admit it to be genuine;¹² but a physician's written report, read in evidence pursuant to a stipulation, has been held to have the same effect as if he had testified to the facts therein stated.¹³ The construction, operation, or effect of other stipulations has been considered,¹⁴ including stipulations as to a handwriting expert,¹⁵ a written report of a member of the county probation staff,¹⁶ and a judgment in a prior case.¹⁷

The construction and effect of stipulations as to the use of copies, records, transcripts, or abstracts of title have been determined in accordance with principles governing stipulations as to evidence generally.

Where the parties stipulate that an instrument offered is a true copy, the stipulation must be taken to refer to the copy as it read on its face, and, therefore, to contemplate an erasure actually appearing therein.¹⁸ Where a copy of an instrument is certified in conformity with the requirements of the stipulation for its admission, no objection can be made to its admission on any ground of lack of identification or authentication.¹⁹ A stipulation that copies of original papers or of records thereof may be used in lieu of originals overcomes the objection that the originals should be offered.²⁰ Such a stipulation merely dispenses with the necessity for laying the foundation for the introduction of secondary evidence,²¹ and does not estop the party from proving that the originals are forgeries²² or invalid in legal effect.²³ A stipulation admitting as evidence a copy of a lease instead of the original does not admit as a fact the relation of lessor and lessee.²⁴

A plaintiff's stipulation that he does not seek to deprive defendant of any term or provision which appears in plaintiff's copy of a contract which plaintiff has placed in evidence waives any objection to defendant's acknowledged and recorded copy of the same contract.²⁵ Where it is stipulated that copies of certain archives of a foreign government may be admitted in evidence in support of defendant's title, there is nothing prejudicial to plaintiff in admitting the application of a third person to that government for such copies, since it is considered merely as introductory to the copies themselves.²⁶

Records; transcripts. Where it is agreed that no evidence will be offered on a particular question, records introduced may not be looked to for such purpose.²⁷ A stipulation that records of the clerk of court might be used in any instance in which a certified copy would be admissible does not authorize the introduction in evidence of a deed book containing a copy of a deed not properly attested.²⁸ A stipulation that a commissioner's summary of the record evidence relating to plaintiff in government files is correct does not preclude defendant from objecting to the admissibility of any part thereof; the summary, or report, is subject to all objections that could properly be made to the admissibility of the original records.²⁹ In a final hearing in a proceeding for injunction, a stipulation by the parties that the proceedings on previous hearings be made part of the record means that all evidence previously taken is to be considered in the final hearing.³⁰

Under a stipulation by a defendant insurer that the record of an employee's action against the employer may be received in evidence for any purpose that is appropriate and material to the issues, the record is in evidence for the purpose of determining whether the injury to the employee was accidental.³¹ A stipulation that a criminal case be tried on the transcript of the preliminary and the exhibits introduced at the time thereof does not deprive accused of the right to have the trial court observe the demeanor of the witnesses on the stand;³² and where, by stipulation, the people's case is submitted on the transcript of the proceedings at the preliminary hearing, accused may not complain that the trial court is without jurisdiction to proceed, on the ground that accused is not confronted with the witnesses against him.³³ A stipulation may be such as to render admissible a transcript of testimony taken in another court.³⁴

Hospital records may be rendered admissible by stipulation, regardless of their admissibility under general rules of evidence;³⁵ and an agreement for the admission of the whole record precludes objection to a part which would otherwise have been admissible.³⁶ On the other hand, a stipulation limiting the records to be read in evidence may be such as to exclude particular portions of hospital records.³⁷

Abstracts of title. Where the parties stipulate that an abstract of title may be used as evidence, and it is so used, such evidence is not exclusive, and a mistake in the abstract may be corrected by introducing the record.³⁸ A stipulation to use abstracts instead of obtaining certified copies of deeds, etc., and filing them, does not require defendants to furnish plaintiff their private abstracts, and there is no error in the trial court in refusing to require them to furnish plaintiff their private papers for examination or to use as evidence.³⁹

The construction and effect of stipulations as to depositions have been determined with respect to such matters as the time for taking, violation of the stipulation, reservation of the right to objection, and waiver of objections or formalities.

Depositions taken before a certain officer by stipulation of the parties are evidence, not by virtue of any authority of the notary to act as commissioner, but by force of the stipulation and his power to administer oaths under the statute.⁴⁰ Where depositions are taken under a stipulation that they could be taken before a certain person, or any other person qualified by the law of the states, a further agreement that they may be read free from objections, "except the certificate of magistracy," means that the certificate of magistracy should be affixed only if the deposition is taken before any person qualified by the laws of the state other than the particular person named.⁴¹ A stipulation authorizing the taking of depositions of a designated person "and other witnesses" authorizes the taking of depositions of witnesses not named.⁴² An agreement that testimony taken by deposition "shall be considered as regularly taken" is not broad enough to admit illegal evidence.⁴³ A stipulation that a juror's ex parte affidavit as to proceedings in the jury room might be read as if taken on deposition, with reservation as to competency of witness, does not require the affidavit to be considered on motion for new trial, it being conceded that it is against public policy for a juror to reveal proceedings in the jury room.⁴⁴

Time for taking. A party agreeing that a deposition may be taken before trial may not complain that it is so taken.⁴⁵

Conditions; statutory provisions. Where a deposition is taken under a stipulation which provides for the admission of the deposition without conditions, it is to be governed by the stipulation and not by statutory provisions.⁴⁶ A stipulation that a deposition may be taken and read in evidence as though all statutory requirements had been followed will be given effect, so as to permit an individual defendant's statutory deposition to be read in evidence against a corporate codefendant.⁴⁷ Substantial compliance with a stipulation under which a witness is to read over his deposition and subscribe and swear to it has been held sufficient.⁴⁸

Violation of stipulation. Where a party's attorney, in taking a deposition, materially violates the terms of a stipulation between the attorneys for the parties, the deposition is properly excluded.⁴⁹ Where a deposition is taken under a stipulation providing that it may be read in evidence subject only to objection as to the competency, materiality, or relevancy of the testimony set forth therein, the exclusion of deposition testimony on other grounds is improper.⁵⁰

Reservation of right of objection. Where it is agreed that a deposition is to be taken with counsel reserving all rights of objection to be made at the time the testimony is offered in evidence, the objections referred to are objections to the admissibility or relevancy of the testimony and not for the purpose of reserving any right to file exceptions or other pleadings in the case.⁵¹

Waiver of objections or formalities. If the stipulation waives designated objections to depositions, no objections are waived other than those so designated.⁵² Where a stipulation waives irregularities and informalities in the taking of depositions and reserves the right to object to matters of substance, the parties are entitled to object to improper matter contained in the depositions,⁵³ but such reservation cannot have the effect to prevent their introduction in evidence.⁵⁴ A party who, at the conclusion of the taking of a deposition, enters into a stipulation for an adjourned hearing at which the witness is to produce certain documents, thereby waives any objection to the taking of the deposition.⁵⁵

Effect of presence of witnesses. Where the parties stipulate that the depositions of certain witnesses may be read and used as depositions taken in any one of three named cases, the use of the depositions in one of the cases is proper, although the witnesses are present in court and there is no proof that they are within any provisions of the statute authorizing the use of depositions.⁵⁶

of record is admissible, although he withdraws and the new counsel does not have the opportunity to cross-examine the witness or to submit cross interrogatories.⁵⁷

f. As to What Witnesses Would Testify

A stipulation as to the testimony a witness would give, if called, may constitute evidence of the fact involved, but is not an admission of the truth of such evidence and does not prevent a party from attacking it.

Where a party agrees that the other party's next witnesses would testify substantially the same as the witnesses previously heard, and the next witnesses so referred to do not testify, the trial court and the jury are justified in assuming that their testimony would have been the same as that heard.⁵⁸ Where parties by stipulation admit without reservation what testimony a witness would give, if called, as in the case of an absent witness, such stipulation may constitute evidence of the fact involved in the testimony,⁵⁹ and may support a finding of the fact involved;⁶⁰ and, if the parties further stipulate that that admission may be used as evidence as though the witness had so testified, the stipulated testimony may be used in the form in which the parties themselves have stated it, although in the form of conclusions.⁶¹

A stipulation of this character does not, however, amount to an admission of the truth⁶² or com-

Hearsay

A stipulation waiving objections to the introduction of depositions expressly stating that "no objection is waived as to the competency, relevancy, or materiality of said depositions in any of said cases, or their admission under the rules of evidence," does not preclude a party from objecting to testimony contained in a deposition on the ground that it was hearsay.—McDonald v. Mulkey, 231 P. 662, 32 Wyo. 144.

Offer in evidence

A stipulation that depositions should be received in evidence without any formality, and subject only to rules of evidence as to materiality and admissibility, waives the formality of taking a rule to show cause why the depositions should not be used as evidence, but does not include the necessity of offering depositions formally in evidence.—Vacaro v. petency⁶³ of such testimony, and does not prevent a party from proving conflicting statements made by the witness,⁶⁴ or that the testimony which he would give is untrue,⁶⁵ constitutes a mere opinion or conclusion,⁶⁶ invades the province of the trier of facts,⁶⁷ has no probative value as evidence,⁶⁸ or is contrary to an admitted fact.⁶⁹ Such a stipulation is not necessarily conclusive as against a party;⁷⁰ nor does it prevent the court from rendering a decision for one of the parties on the ground that the testimony is untrue,⁷¹ or commit a party to the trial court's views of the legal significance of the testimony.⁷² Where the stipulation is made for the purpose of excusing the witness from attendance at court in that cause, the evidence stipulated cannot be used in a subsequent cause between the parties.⁷³

Affidavit in lieu of testimony. Where a party agrees to admit, in lieu of testimony, an affidavit as to the amount of work done by affiant, the trial court may properly use the figures in the affidavit in awarding judgment for plaintiff.⁷⁴

g. As to Testimony of Witnesses on Former Trial

Stipulations as to the use or admission of testimony of witnesses at former trials have been variously construed and given effect according to their terms. Authorities differ as to whether such a stipulation precludes objections to the competency or materiality of the testimony.

According to some decisions, a stipulation in general terms, and without qualification, that testimony of witnesses on a former trial may be read in evidence, precludes objections to its competency or materiality;⁷⁵ and if, by stipulation, testimony taken in another case is read, no objection can be taken to it that was not taken on the trial at which it was admitted.⁷⁶ On the other hand, it has been held that a stipulation that the testimony of a witness in another case might be used to establish certain facts does not waive the right to object that certain of the testimony is incompetent.⁷⁷ Similarly, it has been held that a stipulation that testimony of witnesses on the former trial of a case should be taken and considered as if delivered on the second trial permits the admission of the testimony of such witnesses but subject to the objections and exceptions taken on the former trial.⁷⁸ It has also been held that, where two actions are tried together, and the testimony objected to is taken in one action only and exception reserved in that case only, a stipulation by which such testimony is to be considered in the other case as though repeated in that case will be regarded as preserving the exception in the other case.⁷⁹

A stipulation that either party may use the testimony given by any witness at a former trial, in order to save the cost of taking depositions to perpetuate testimony, does not give a party the unlimited right to introduce the transcript of the testimony at the former trial, particularly with respect to a witness who had testified at the former trial and is present at the subsequent one.⁸⁰ Where a stipulation agreeing to the admission of testimony given in another case reserves the right to both parties to object to it for immateriality, irrelevancy, or other matter of substance, no objection can be made on the ground that the witnesses were incompetent.⁸¹ Where defendant had stipulated that testimony of certain witnesses in another case might be used in the trial against him at a succeeding term of court, an objection to reading of testimony of one of such witnesses, for the reason that his name had not been indorsed on the information, may be properly overruled, since the object of indorsing names of state's witnesses on the information is to apprise defendant of witnesses whose testimony he may have to meet.⁸² In a proceeding to determine adverse claims, where the parties stipulated that testimony taken in one of several cases may be used in any other case, it has been held that testimony given by a witness, dead at the time of the trial, in a prior case, and read in evidence by one of the parties, is admissible as to all parties whose interests were affected by the prior case.⁸³ A stipulation filed in support of a demurrer to a declaration, authorizing the court in passing on the demurrer to consider the record in a prior action against plaintiff with the evidence and contract introduced therein, does not authorize the court to determine questions of fact tendered by the declaration.⁸⁴ A stipulation that testimony at a former trial may be read in evidence may be given effect where the testimony is in the form of an exhibit attached to the stipulation.⁸⁵

Testimony of party. An agreement by an accused that his testimony in a prior prosecution of another should be considered by the court as his testimony in the plea of guilty in the prosecution against him bars him from claiming that the trial judge erred in making his finding and entering judgment on that testimony.⁸⁶ In an action to determine whether a decedent's property is separate or community property, under a stipulation that evidence in a will contest may be used, the trial court has the right to use the evidence of the widow as to her transac-

Depositions. A stipulation that "any and all testimony taken in another case may be used in this" embraces a deposition taken in such other case after the date of the agreement, it appearing that this was the construction acted on by the counsel then engaged in the cause;⁸⁸ but a deposition taken in a former action pursuant to a stipulation specifying the action in which it might be used cannot be admitted in an action other than that specified;⁸⁹ and an agreement that one party may use a deposition taken in his behalf in another suit does not authorize the other party to use it.⁹⁰ Where a deposition contains principally competent testimony, a stipulation that it may be used at any other trial of the same case does not imply that a portion of the deposition containing incompetent testimony is to be received if objected to.⁹¹ A stipulation for the receipt in evidence of "properly authenticated" copies of depositions filed in a former suit has been held not to require technical authentication.⁹²

stipulations is that the court must, if possible, ascertain and give effect to the intent of the parties.⁹⁴ The stipulation must be given a fair and reasonable construction,⁹⁵ and not a strained one,⁹⁶ and should be construed broadly in the interest of justice.⁹⁷ Such a stipulation must be construed as a whole and the intent of the parties collected from the entire instrument,⁹⁸ and, if there are two stipulations, they must be construed together as parts of one agreement.⁹⁹ A stipulation of this nature is to be construed in the light of the whole record,¹ including the state of the pleadings and the allegations therein,² and the attitude of the parties in respect of the issues;³ and it is also to be construed in the light of surrounding circumstances⁴ or the situation at the time of its execution.⁵

Where the language of one party may be understood in more senses than one, the stipulation is to be interpreted in the sense in which he had reason to suppose it was understood by the other party.⁶ A construction should be avoided, if possible, which will make the stipulation frivolous or ineffectual;⁷ and a construction will not be adopted which will permit of its being used as a trap to the disadvantage of one of the parties.⁸ Generally, words employed will be given their ordinary and popular meaning.⁹ Technical words will be given their technical meaning,¹⁰ but should not be permitted to vitiate the plain terms of the stipulation.¹¹ If ambiguous, the stipulation will be construed most strongly against the party relying on it.¹²

been held to be a mere legal conclusion.²³ So, a party plaintiff may even "stipulate himself out of court," where he admits facts which conclusively bar his right to recovery;²⁴ and, on the other hand, a party defendant may, by stipulation, admit every fact essential to a valid cause of action against him,²⁵ or foreclose himself from relying on a particular ground of defense.²⁶

The general rule that stipulations admitting the existence of facts for the purpose of the trial are conclusive on the parties does not apply where it appears from the manner in which the case was tried that the stipulation was ignored,²⁷ as where the party relying thereon introduces evidence inconsistent therewith.²⁸ Likewise, the court is not bound where the stipulation is contrary to a fact in evidence.²⁹

As affecting jurisdiction. Where jurisdiction of the court has attached by virtue of the pleadings, jurisdiction cannot be detached by a subsequent stipulation in the course of the trial on some question of fact.³⁰

Effect of conclusions of law or fact contained in stipulation. The parties are not necessarily bound by conclusions of law³¹ or fact³² contained in the stipulation, and are not so bound where the conclusions are not warranted by the facts stated.³³ A stipulation of conclusion, without basis in the facts, but contrary to them, may not be regarded in the decision of the case,³⁴ and the court is not bound thereby.³⁵

(b) On Subsequent Trial of Same or Different Cause

Authorities differ as to whether admission of facts by stipulation for the purpose of trial is available in a subsequent trial.

According to some decisions, stipulations admitting facts for the purpose of trial are always understood as having reference to the trial then pending, and not as stipulations which shall bind the parties at any future trial;³⁶ and others hold that such a stipulation, if objected to by either party, will not be binding on another trial.³⁷ Thus, it has been said that if a stipulation offered in evidence

Criminal case

When attorneys on both sides in criminal case stipulate or agree as to existence of a fact, jury must accept stipulation as evidence and regard such fact as conclusively proved.—U. S. v. Schneiderman, D.C.Cal., 106 F.Supp. 906.

Oral evidence superseded by stipulation

No valuable consideration for note

A stipulation that the only consideration for note, on which claim against deceased maker's estate was based, was love and affection eliminated statutory presumption of valuable consideration.—In re Smith's Estate, 277 N.W. 141, 226 Wis. 556.

Stipulation of divorce; issue of annulment

Party, by stipulating that he had already been awarded a divorce decree, put himself out of court on issue as to annulment of marriage of the parties.—Noble v. Noble, 189 P.2d 502, 83 Cal.App.2d 775.

Right to tax reduction

In proceeding to secure reduction in tax assessment, stipulation conceding that assessments were equal and proportionate with other assessments in city showed that relator was not aggrieved and hence could not secure relief.—People ex rel. Rickey v. Hunt, 271 N.Y.S. 842, 241 App.Div. 261.

was intended to be only evidential for the purpose alone of the particular proceeding then pending, and as to which it was made merely to save time, and for convenience to avoid calling witnesses, it should be regarded only as evidentiary, and not conclusive of the facts therein recited; but, if it was intended as a stipulation of ultimate facts in the cause, and applicable alike to all proceedings and trials thereof, it should be regarded as conclusive as to all such facts, unless on sufficient grounds it is shown to the court why either or both of the parties should be relieved from its effects or be allowed to withdraw it.³⁸

Nevertheless, the weight of authority is to the effect that a stipulation admitting facts for the purpose of trial, where there is nothing expressed in the agreement limiting its operation to the particular trial at which it is made, and nothing in the surrounding circumstances to demand such limitation, is equally binding on any subsequent trial of the same cause between the same parties, although the agreement does not specifically refer to more than one trial,³⁹ unless the court permits the withdrawal of the stipulation on proper application therefor;⁴⁰ but, where the admission is obviously intended for one trial alone,⁴¹ as where it is expressly limited by the agreement to the trial then pending,⁴² or where the language of the stipulation is such as to show that the parties contemplated only one trial from which there might be an appeal,⁴³ it is not admissible on a subsequent trial of the same cause between the same parties. Also, it has been held that a stipulation as to the existence of a certain fact is not binding on a second trial when the stipulation plainly showed that in the course of time such fact would cease to exist and where it had ceased to exist before the second trial.⁴⁴ The circumstances surrounding the admission may be such as to show that it was not intended to be used on a subsequent trial.⁴⁵

Effect in different action. Admissions of fact made by counsel in one case has no binding effect in another and different action,⁴⁶ unless the client expressly authorized or ratified the admission.⁴⁷

(2) As to Facts Not Specifically Admitted

Stipulations admitting or agreeing on the existence of designated facts do not admit facts not so designated, and not necessarily inferable from the facts designated; but such a stipulation is conclusive of the existence of facts necessarily inferred from those admitted or agreed on.

Stipulations admitting or agreeing on the existence of designated facts do not admit facts not so designated,⁴⁸ and not necessarily inferable from the facts so designated.⁴⁹ Accordingly, a stipulation

Admission of liability; amount of damages

Where defendant insurance company stipulates to liability and agrees to pay damages to extent of its coverage, it is not precluded from complaining that damages are excessive, even though not above policy limits; stipulation puts plaintiff to proof of damages, and liability is admitted

Validity of ordinance

Stipulation that contract with city was made and approved by ordinance is not a stipulation as to validity of ordinance, which is a question of law and not a proper matter for agreement of the parties.—City of Indianapolis v. Link Realty Co., 179 N.E. 574, 94 Ind.App. 1.

Insolvency

A stipulation that executor was insolvent on certain date did not prove that claim of tax commission against him personally for inheritance taxes for which he was personally liable was worthless.—In re Shafer's Estate, 56 N.E.2d 926, 74 Ohio App. 33.

Finding that check was not presented for payment until a certain date was held justified under stipulation that it was presented for payment on that date.—Steinmetz v. Schultz, 241 N.W. 734, 59 S.D. 603.

Execution and recording of conveyances

In ejectment action, defendant's stipulation that plaintiff and his predecessors had a title of record back to a specified year obviated the necessity of proving due execution and recording of conveyances.—Pennington v. Anglin, 155 S.W.2d 860, 288 Ky. 226.

Absence of fraud or undue influence

Stipulation that joint tenancies were complete, that they were in full effect, and that all steps necessary to set forth and establish them as joint tenancies had been taken conceded that there was no fraud or undue influence in connection with their creation.—Brown v. MacDougall, 112 P.2d 678, 44 Cal.App.2d 491.

Qualification of expert witness

In malpractice action, stipulation by defendant that physician was a qualified expert witness indicated intention to stipulate that witness was qualified to testify as to whether defendant's treatment of plaintiff was consistent with what other physicians in locality, in the exercise of reasonable care, might have done under similar circumstances, since witness, in order to have been a qualified expert, must have known such matters.—McGuire v. Baird, 70 P.2d 915, 9 Cal.2d 353.

Treasurer having customary duties

Where it was stipulated that person was treasurer of corporate owner, and nothing was said about any limitation as to his duties or title prior to trial, corporate owner was estopped to claim that such person did not have usual and customary duties of a treasurer.—The Marguerite W., D.C.Wis., 49 F.Supp. 929, affirmed, C.C.A., 140 F.2d 491.

Physician satisfactory to insurer

(1) In action on insurance policy requiring submission of proofs of insured's injury by "physician satisfactory to insurer," stipulation showing that physician who signed proofs, in filling out certificate of death of insured in another case, did not mention tuberculosis from which insured suffered, showed reasonable basis for insurer's rejection of such proofs on ground that physician was unsatisfactory to insurer.—Murphy v. National Life & Accident Ins. Co., 150 S.W.2d 1073, 177 Tenn. 449.

(2) In such action, stipulation that one who signed proofs of insured's illness was a duly licensed and practicing physician established prima facie that such person was worthy

by the jury is not necessary.⁵²

(3) As Affecting Necessity for, or Admissibility of, Other Evidence

No proof of stipulated facts is necessary. Evidence to disprove the facts admitted, or inconsistent therewith, is inadmissible.

No proof of stipulated or admitted facts, or of matters necessarily implied thereby, is necessary,⁵³ the stipulations being substituted for proof and dispensing with evidence;⁵⁴ so, it is not error to exclude evidence of a fact which has been stipulated.⁵⁵ However, relevant evidence cannot be kept from the jury by an admission of the fact,⁵⁶ the admission of evidence tending to establish a stipulated fact is not prejudicial error;⁵⁷ and a stipulation of facts will not be given an effect which would necessitate the disregarding of facts established by uncontradicted testimony.⁵⁸ A stipulation admitting designated facts does not relieve the parties of the necessity of proving facts not admitted either in terms or by necessary implication and which are essential elements of a valid cause of action or defense.⁵⁹

In Texas

(1) A stipulation of parties satisfies any lack of pleading of facts agreed to in stipulation.—City of Fort Worth v. Lee, Civ.App., 182 S.W.2d 831, affirmed 186 S.W.2d 954, 143 Tex. 551, 159 A.L.R. 125.

(2) Where a fact, not alleged in petition, was adduced and parties agreed to its truth and that it could be considered by court in ruling on demurrer to the petition, it had the same effect as if it had been expressly alleged in the petition, and the court could consider the fact in ruling on the demurrer.—Bigfoot Independent School Dist. v. Genard, Civ. App., 116 S.W.2d 804, affirmed 129 S.W.2d 1213, 133 Tex. 368.

(3) It has been held, however, that a written stipulation between the parties, reciting facts not contained in the petition, not filed in the trial

ings;⁷⁰ and a stipulation and evidence may be sufficient to bring an action within the provisions of a statute, even though such provisions are not referred to in the pleadings.⁷¹ A defendant entering into an agreement and stipulation with plaintiff that the pleadings be taken and considered as a stipulation of fact thereby admits that all the allegations of the declaration are true.⁷² A stipulation which admits facts set forth in a pleading is subject to the qualification that it is limited to facts properly pleaded.⁷³

A stipulation may be equivalent to a failure to deny the specific allegations of the petition on the subject involved;⁷⁴ and it has been held that stipulated evidence received on motion to dismiss a petition modifies and largely obviates what would otherwise be an admission by the motion of allegations of the petition.⁷⁵ A stipulation limited by the parties to a consideration by the trial court of special exceptions urged against the petition does not extend to any other portion of the pleadings, or to what may or may not be established on a trial on the merits.⁷⁶ Where judgment is based not on the pleadings alone, but on pleadings and a stipulation admitting a designated fact, the stipulation is controlling, regardless of any allegations of denial thereof in the pleadings.⁷⁷

(6) Effect with Respect to Instructions

Instructions must be given or refused in accordance with stipulated or admitted facts.

An instruction which would deny effect to a stipulation or admission of a fact is properly refused or improperly given;⁷⁸ conversely, it is error to fail or refuse to instruct in accordance with such stipulation or admission.⁷⁹ Admissions, by stipulation, in the course of a trial of facts to which the issues relate, preclude exceptions after the trial to instructions to the jury to answer the issues in accordance with such admissions.⁸⁰

§ 25. — As to Agreed Statement of Facts

- a. In general
- b. Operation and effect

a. In General

A stipulation for trial on an agreed statement of facts is to be reasonably construed, as a whole, in the light of the language used and the object or purpose to be attained, and with the view to carrying out the parties' intent.

The purpose of an agreed statement of facts is to facilitate the hearing, save the time, trouble, and expense of examination of witnesses, and at the same time present to the court the essential facts on which the decision is to turn.⁸¹ The circumstance that the facts are stipulated does not make an issue of fact less factual in nature.⁸²

Rules governing the construction of stipulations generally, discussed supra § 11, apply to stipulations pendente lite for trial on an agreed statement of facts.⁸³ Such an agreement or stipulation is not to court, would at most be material only on a trial on the merits, and could not be regarded as a pleading, and could not be considered in the determination of a demurrer to the petition for failure to state a cause of action.—*State v. (1) In General

An agreed statement of facts on which the parties submit the case for trial is binding and conclusive on them and on the court, and is equivalent to a special verdict or finding of facts; and only questions of law are submitted for the court's decision.

The proceeding in a trial on an agreed statement of facts is equivalent to motions by the respective parties for directed verdicts or judgments,⁹⁴ and constitutes an admission that only questions of law are involved, and that there are no disputed or controverted questions of fact in the case.⁹⁵ In the absence of grounds sufficient to authorize a party to withdraw from, or rescind, the stipulation, as discussed infra § 30, or the court to set it aside, infra § 35, an agreed statement of facts on which the parties submit the case for trial is binding and conclusive on them,⁹⁶ and the facts stated are not subject to subsequent variation.⁹⁷ So, the parties will not be permitted to deny the truth of the facts stated,⁹⁸ or the truth, competency, or sufficiency of any admission contained in the agreed statement,⁹⁹ or to maintain a contention contrary to the agreed statement,¹ or be heard to claim that there are other facts that the court may presume to exist,²

Where agreement as to facts was filed before case was tried, and facts were plainly set forth and were fully agreed on, both parties are bound thereby, and losers in the action should not be heard to object to the proceedings.—General Motors Acceptance Corp. v. Appeal

(1) Jurisdiction of court on appeal may be shown by agreed statement entered into by parties.—Maul v. Williams, 69 S.W.2d 1107, motion granted Maul v. Williams, 78 S.W.2d 164, 124 Tex. 408, mandate conformed to, Civ.App., 88 S.W.2d 1087.

(2) On appeal, court is confined to stipulation of facts agreed to by parties as substitute for evidence.—Commonwealth v. Pittsburgh & Weirton Bus Co., 173 A. 887, 114 Pa. Super. 290.

The referee and board in a compensation case are bound by the stipulation of facts agreed on by the parties and filed of record, and any finding of fact which is opposed to the facts as stipulated will be disregarded by the court.—Thomas v. Issues

(1) The issues must be confined to the agreed statement of facts; the trial court cannot go outside of the record and decide questions neither pleaded nor argued.—Clegghorn v. Benjamin, 31 N.W.2d 887, 239 Iowa 455.

(2) Where a case is submitted for trial without a jury on a stipulation of facts, the issue for the court to decide is that set forth in the stipulation, and not such issues as may be raised by way of written argument or brief.—Shepard v. Hilton, 163 A. 805, 11 N.J.Misc. 8.

Grounds of recovery

In a case heard on agreed facts, without power in the court to draw inferences, plaintiff cannot recover on grounds not set out in the statement.—Norfolk Hardwood Co. v. New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co., 88 N.E. 664, 202 Mass. 160.

mere conclusion or question of law,²¹ and the judgment is to be pronounced precisely as if a jury had found a verdict in that form.²² The submission of an issue to the jury is error.²³

Statement of agreed facts with right of objection reserved is properly excluded by the court where there is nothing in the statement of a material character that was not before the court.²⁴ A reservation, in an agreed statement of facts, of the right to object to the admission of any agreed fact on the ground of immateriality does not apply so as to exclude evidence which cannot be regarded as immaterial.²⁵

Agreed statement and other evidence. The language of an agreed statement of facts may be such that the court is not confined to the facts recited as agreed, but is at liberty to hear and pass on other competent evidence calculated to assist it in deciding the question.²⁶ In such a case, the court is bound to make its conclusions on the stipulation in so far as the facts necessary are agreed on, but as to the facts not stipulated it can refer to the evidence for their determination.²⁷ Where a case is tried on agreed stipulation of facts and other evidence, it is proper for the jury to consider all the evidence, even though part of it may be inconsistent with the statement of facts.²⁸ In such a case, the testimony of the commonwealth's witnesses and the exhibits received in evidence as part of its case have been held to control over the agreed statement of facts, where they clash.²⁹

Agreed statement of facts and other stipulations. A stipulation that an action in which defendant prayed affirmative relief shall be submitted on an agreed statement of facts, and that if the defendant "prevails" a certain judgment shall be rendered does not prevent plaintiff from having a dismissal without prejudice, in which case defendant, although obtaining judgment, will not have prevailed within the meaning of the stipulation.³⁰

Request for judgment

An agreed statement of facts admits there is no dispute as to the facts, and constitutes a request by each of the litigants for a judgment, which each contends arises as matter of law from the agreed facts.—Hutcherson v. Sovereign Camp, W. O. W., 251 S.W. 491, 112 Tex. 551, 28 A.L.R. 823.

A conclusion of law contradictory of the agreed statement is sufficient to vitiate the judgment.—Birney v. Warren, 72 P. 293, 28 Mont. 64.

A demurrer to evidence is not proper practice when the parties have agreed on the facts.—Bridgeport Wooden-Ware Mfg. Co. v. Louisville, etc., R. Co., 53 S.W. 739, 103 Tenn. 490.

Where no other competent evidence is offered, the court can consider as evidence only the agreed statement of facts.—State ex rel. Farrel v. City of Cleveland, 187 N.E. 317, 45 Ohio App. 460.

Additional proof; discretion of court

(1) Generally.—Foster v. U. S., D.C.Tex., 85 F.Supp. 447—In re Mossler Co., Ill., 239 F. 262, 152 C.C.A. 250.

(2) When it appeared on the argument that plaintiff had omitted to include in the stipulation a fact on which his right of recovery depended, and which in no way tended to modify any fact agreed on, it was discretionary with the court to permit proof of such fact to be received.—Thomas Canning Co. v. Johnson, 180 N.W. 391, 212 Mich. 243.

(3) Where, by consent of counsel, evidence is presented to trial judge, in action without a jury, in form of a stipulation consisting of a statement of facts intermingled with impressions derived from those facts by witnesses, whether to consider such evidence is discretionary.—Jarrett v. U. S., C.A.Va., 184 F.2d 532.

(4) Where parties stipulated the facts on which action should be tried, and agreed that such facts constituted all the facts, and should be considered proved, and after submission of the case, plaintiff moved for leave to take further testimony, which was granted without giving defendant the right to rebut such new evidence, no fraud or deceit by defendant being shown relative to the stipulation, the permission to plaintiff to take such additional evidence, without even affording defendant an opportunity to rebut it, was erroneous.—Adams v. Hartzell, 119 N.W. 635, 18 N.D. 221.

Consideration on motions for summary judgment.

A stipulation of all the material facts to be used in the consideration of plaintiff's motion for summary judgment should also be used in determining a similar motion on behalf of defendant, unless it is limited by plain and unambiguous language, and in the absence of any suggestion that the facts were colored or adjusted so as to be applicable only to a motion by plaintiff.³¹

(2) Availability on Subsequent Trial of Same Cause

Under most authorities, an agreed statement of fact not limited by its terms to the trial at which it is made is admissible on a subsequent trial of the same cause between the same parties.

While there is authority to the contrary,³² according to the weight of authority, where the parties agree on a statement of facts, and that the case shall be determined thereon, and there is nothing expressed in the terms of the agreement limiting its operation to the particular trial at which it is made, the agreed statement of facts is admissible on a subsequent trial of the same cause between the same parties,³³ especially where it consists largely of record matters.³⁴ It has been held, however, that a stipulation of an agreed statement of facts, to be used in the trial of a cause, that it "shall constitute the evidence in the trial of said cause," does not prevent the introduction of further evidence on a second trial.³⁵

(3) As Affecting Necessity or Admissibility of Other Evidence

After agreement on a statement of facts, no further proof is necessary; and evidence to contradict the facts agreed on is inadmissible.

Where the parties have agreed on a statement of facts on which to try the case, no further proof is necessary,³⁶ and no evidence to contradict the facts agreed on is admissible or can be considered.³⁷ Where the statement provides that it is a complete statement of all the facts, with a particular exception, evidence as to matters other than that excepted is inadmissible;³⁸ but it has been held that a party is not precluded by the stipulation from giving other pertinent evidence in the absence of a provision, express or implied, to that effect in the stipulation,³⁹ or where the agreed statement of facts provided that facts therein should be taken as and for facts on which judgment should be rendered, but did not state that those were all the facts.⁴⁰ Also, a stipulation that an agreed statement of facts should constitute the facts of the case, with reservation of right to the parties to produce testimony to show a certain conversation had on a specified date, does not prevent proof of the conversation referred to, although it actually occurred on another date.⁴¹ If it is stipulated that evidence may be added at the trial, only such evidence as is pertinent to the issue made, and which was in existence at the date of the stipulation, is admissible.⁴²

or are immaterial,⁴⁵ including any error in the action of the court in its rulings on the pleadings.⁴⁶ The case is to be decided on the merits as if the questions had been presented by proper pleadings,⁴⁷ or the statement as a whole can be received or accepted as supplemental to, or as amplifying, the allegations of both bill and answer.⁴⁸ In a suit to set aside succession proceedings and judgment on the ground that the court had no jurisdiction, averments in plaintiff's petition that the succession had been previously opened and administered in another parish could not be considered, where such allegations were not admitted in the agreed statement of facts, and no reference to the former proceedings was made in the proceedings sought to be set aside.⁴⁹

Conflict between pleadings and statement. A defendant agreeing to a statement of facts which contradicts incidental averments of the bill has been held unable, thereafter, to take advantage of the variance between the bill and the agreed facts.⁵⁰ So, where a case is tried on facts stated by the parties and agreed on by them to be true, the facts must be accepted as true and binding on both parties, notwithstanding they are contradicted by admissions in the answer of one party, favorable to his adversary.⁵¹ Where a stipulation of facts is entered into only for the purpose of standing "in lieu of taking testimony," and there is a conflict between the effect of admissions made in the pleadings and in the stipulation, the stipulation will not be construed as having the effect of standing in place, and overruling the effect, of the pleadings,⁵² but is to be given the same effect as would be given where the admissions made by the pleadings and the proof afforded by the evidence are contradictory.⁵³

(5) Inferences from Agreed Statement and Conclusions Drawn by Stipulations

While, on an agreed statement of facts, all necessary inferences may be drawn and considered, authorities are not uniform as to whether any inferences other than necessary ones may be so drawn.

On an agreed statement of facts, all necessary inferences may be drawn and considered,⁵⁹ because the necessary inferences are in legal effect a part of the facts agreed.⁶⁰ Also, it has been held that, in an action submitted on an agreed statement of facts, the court may make any legitimate⁶¹ or reasonable⁶² inferences, or any inferences of which the facts may rightly be susceptible,⁶³ or that the court may draw the reasonable and legitimate inferences in the same way, and to the same extent, that it could have done had the facts agreed on been adduced by the taking of testimony in open court.⁶⁴ The agreement may provide that inferences, deductions, and conclusions of fact may be drawn from the agreed facts.⁶⁵ Other holdings are to the effect that, where a case is tried on an agreed statement of facts, none except necessary inferences can be drawn or considered;⁶⁶ or, as otherwise expressed, the court, in the absence of any provision to that effect, is not at liberty to infer the existence of any further essential facts which are not as matter of law necessarily to be inferred, but is confined to the consideration of the facts to which the parties have agreed.⁶⁷ It has also been held that no inferences

§ 26. — As to Trial

- a. In general
- b. Instructions and verdict

a. In General

A stipulation relating to the trial of a cause must be construed as a whole and the intention of the parties collected from the entire instrument, and the parties thereto are concluded as to all matters necessarily included in the stipulation, but not as to matters not so included.

Rules governing construction, operation, and effect of stipulations generally, discussed supra §§ 11-17, apply to the construction⁷² and to the operation and effect⁷³ of stipulations relating to the trial of causes. Such a stipulation must be construed as a whole and the intention of the parties collected from the entire instrument,⁷⁴ and the parties thereto are concluded as to all matters necessarily included in the stipulation,⁷⁵ but not as to matters not so included.⁷⁶ Each party is entitled to rely on the stipulation and govern his actions with respect to the case in accordance therewith.⁷⁷

In accordance with the foregoing rules, the courts have construed the operation and effect of numerous particular stipulations as to trial,⁷⁸ as with respect

Submission to counsel

The effect of a stipulation of parties waiving jury, and providing that findings of fact should be submitted to respective counsel and filed at least five days before judgment should be rendered, was that filing of findings of fact and conclusions of law should not be considered as a final decision.—Morris v. Barton, 190 P.2d 451, 200 Okl. 4.

Waiver

(1) Stipulations by parties that jury be waived and that findings of fact and conclusions of law be waived, and that court may render decision accordingly, are not in every respect binding on the court, and courts may and should depart from them where they interfere with orderly procedure or preclude intelligent review on appeal.—Mason v. Lory Dress Co., 102 N.Y.S.2d 285, 278 App. Div. 660.

(2) Where action at law was tried before the court without a jury and formal findings of fact and conclusions of law were waived by stipulation, trial judge would nevertheless undertake to state the facts which he deemed essential.—Sasmor v. V. Vi-vaudou, Inc., 103 N.Y.S.2d 640, 200 Misc. 1020.

Courts have adjudicated, in accordance with general rules, the conclusiveness and effect of other stipulations concerning submission of the case to the court without a jury,⁵ submission of the case on testimony taken before a referee⁶ or on the pleadings alone,⁷ submission of case to jury on special interrogatories,⁸ suspending action,⁹ time for hearing certain pleas or motions,¹⁰ time of taking testimony,¹¹ time for trial,¹² and the conclusiveness and pleadings and on evidence adduced at time of motions precluded introduction of further evidence after pronouncement of judgment.—Schofield v. Scofield, 3 P.2d 794, 89 Colo. 409.

Venue

Stipulation, which was approved by the trial court, that venue question and merits would be tried to a jury at the same time was enforceable and tantamount to demand by both sides for jury trial of the venue issues.—Aycock v. Graham, Tex. Civ. App., 250 S.W.2d 935.

Second judge

Where, after case had been heard by a judge who died without making a decision, case was submitted to another judge in accordance with stipulation for his determination on a transcript of all the evidence, which stipulation did not require second judge to make any rulings on evidence or to adopt any ruling made at first trial, exceptions taken at first trial became of no avail.—Graustein v. Boston & Maine R. R., 57 N.E.2d 570, 317 Mass. 164.

Compensation of trustee

A stipulation of parties in suit for accounting by trustee to effect that trial court might, if it found that trustee was entitled to any compensation for his services, determine the amount to which he was entitled did not constitute agreement by parties to be bound by whatever amount the trial judge might determine so as to preclude parties, on appeal, from questioning amount allowed by trial court.—Marshall v. Frazier, 81 P.2d 132, 159 Or. 491.

Indefinite time in future

Stipulation to set case for trial at indefinite time in future is merely an agreement that case will be set down for trial within reasonable time in effect of other stipulations concerning time for final submission¹³ or adjudication on the merits,¹⁴ transfer of the cause,¹⁵ trial by the court as an equity case,¹⁶ and viewing of certain premises by the trial judge.¹⁷

b. Instructions and Verdict

Rules governing the construction, operation, and effect of stipulations generally apply to stipulations relating to instructions and verdict.

Rules governing the construction, operation, and effect of stipulations generally, discussed supra §§ 11-17, apply to stipulations relating to instructions.¹⁸ Where the parties stipulate that the pleadings shall be part of the instructions, the court may instruct accordingly.¹⁹ The court may properly refuse additional instructions where the instructions already given are by stipulation made decisive of the case.²⁰ A stipulation that an instruction is "founded upon and justified" by the evidence forecloses all objections to its propriety.²¹ A stipulation that certain instructions were prepared and given without objection on behalf of defendant's attorney has been held not to preclude either party from excepting to them in the manner provided by statute.²² An oral stipulation made by counsel to the effect that they would risk the jury with the judge and that he could do what he thought was right in their absence, made after the jury had been charged by the court and the issues had been argued to the jury, does not authorize the judge to withdraw the original charge and submit altogether new and different issues in the absence of counsel.²³ A stipulation that the court may instruct orally and in writing does not waive the requirement that the instructions be presented in writing to the court in time to be properly considered.²⁴ A stipulation that without testimony the court may consider the laws of another state in evidence and instruct as it conceives the law to be under the decisions of the state is not an agreement to be bound by the court's conclusion as to the law as expressed in its instructions.²⁵

Verdict. General rules as to the construction, operation, and effect of stipulations also apply with respect to stipulations concerning the verdict,²⁶ such future, and burden is on plaintiff to show diligence in attempting to bring case for trial within such reasonable time.—Sedarovich v. Paul, 60 P.2d 871, 16 Cal.App.2d 452.

Preservation of evidence

Party's agreement contained in record to try case as a chancery cause did not dispense with necessity of preserving evidence by bill of exceptions and filing of record for writ of error would avail appellant nothing.—Walker v. Partin, 227 S.W.2d 778, 32 Tenn.App. 683.

18. Iowa.—Sanford v. Nesbit, 11 N.W.2d 695, 234 Iowa 14.

In absence of fundamental error

Where counsel for accused stipulated with county attorney as to instruction to be given and court gave such instructions, accused could not thereafter complain of the giving thereof unless fundamental error was apparent.—Bush v. State, 215 P.2d 577, 91 Okl.Cr. 30.

Special instruction

Stipulation that court need not give special instruction on probable cause in malicious prosecution case did not authorize court to define "probable cause" incorrectly to jury.—Huber v. Thomas, 19 P.2d 1042, 45 Wyo. 440.

Tex.—Cas. Reciprocal Exchange v. Berry, Civ.App., 90 S.W.2d 595, error refused.

Utah.—Fudge v. Downing, 27 P.2d 33, 83 Utah 101.

Interest

Where parties stipulated that question of interest on any verdict which might be returned should be determined by court and not jury, court had authority to reserve and determine it.—Hartford Acc. & Indem. Co. v. Collins-Dietz-Morris Co., C.C.A. Okl., 80 F.2d 441.

Correction

Where record in condemnation proceeding disclosed that parties stipulated in open court that verdict could be corrected as to description, defendants could not contend on appeal that verdict was not in conformity with complaint filed.—Department of Public Works & Bldgs. v. Filkins, 104 N.E.2d 214, 411 Ill. 304.

Permanent damages

In action for damages to land, stipulation that verdict might set forth amount of permanent damages, if any, was not agreement by defendant that plaintiffs were entitled to recov-

as a stipulation that the jury might separate after rendering a sealed verdict.²⁷ A stipulation for a sealed verdict does not operate to dispense with the attendance of the jurors when it is opened and read in court²⁸ or deprive the court of the right to have the jury polled.²⁹ Also, a stipulation that should the jury agree that night, they might return a sealed verdict to the clerk and disperse, cannot be construed to extend to a verdict found on the next day.³⁰

Where the parties by stipulation agreed on the amount of the verdict in the event that plaintiff recover judgment, recovery is not erroneously allowed in the absence of proof of damages.³¹ A stipulation that in the event of a verdict a designated amount would be fair and reasonable does not prevent the jury from using their own judgment as to the amount to which plaintiff is entitled.³² Where, at the suggestion of the trial court, the attorneys for both parties, after each had moved for a directed verdict, stipulated that on reservation of decision the court might enter a verdict in the absence of the jury as a general verdict, as though the jury were actually present, after such a verdict had been entered, the trial court properly refused to make findings of facts and conclusions of law, the verdict, when entered according to the stipulation, having the same effect as a general verdict.³³

§ 27. — As to Judgments and Executions

Rules relating to the construction, operation, and effect of stipulations generally apply to the construction, operation, and effect of stipulations relating to judgments or decrees, and executions.

Rules relating to the construction, operation, and effect of stipulations generally, discussed supra §§ 11-17, apply to the construction, operation, and effect of stipulations relating to judgments³⁴ or deer permanent damages, but agreement that they were entitled to permanent damages, if any.—Carpenter v. City of Versailles, Mo.App., 65 S. W.2d 957.

Reduction

Stipulation authorizing court to select expert to examine plaintiff, so as to aid court in ruling on motion to set aside verdict for injuries as excessive, permitted trial justice to reduce verdict on basis of medical reports made after trial.—Nichols v. Corroon, 274 N.Y.S. 596, 242 App.Div. 787.

Signature by one juror

Where counsel orally agreed that verdict would be signed by one juror after the others were excused and that case would be decided by presiding judge, court improperly entered judgment without directing verdict and having it signed by one juror, since losing party was deprived of opportunity to move for new trial.—Lester v. Schutt, 152 So. 726, 113 Fla. 659.

27. Or.—Lehl v. Hull, 53 P.2d 48, 152 Or. 470, rehearing denied 54 P.2d 290, 152 Or. 470.

Absence of valid verdict

Stipulation that jury might separate after rendering sealed verdict constitutes waiver of statutory provision requiring jury to be kept together, even though it subsequently develops that no valid verdict has been agreed on.—Lehl v. Hull, supra.

Disposition of reserved ruling

Plaintiff by his stipulation that jury might seal their verdict and separate agreed that trial court might dispose of its reserved ruling on defendant's motion for a directed verdict after jury separated.—Compass Sales Corp. v. Nat. Mineral Co., 53

Motion

Defendant may bring suit for breach of terms of stipulation of settlement, but cannot have judgment entered pursuant to such settlement set aside on motion.—La Salle Extension University v. Pappace, 273 N.Y.S. 198, 152 Misc. 274.

Action not terminated

A stipulation of settlement did not terminate the action, but when motion to vacate the stipulation or to relieve defendants therefrom was made, the action was still pending.—Isler v. Isler, 24 N.Y.S.2d 401, 260 App.Div. 1032, reargument denied 25 N.Y.S.2d 998, 261 App.Div. 827.

Construed with pleadings

A written stipulation of facts authorizing rendering of judgment accordingly should be construed with, and is controlling over, the pleadings with which the stipulation merges.—Capital Nat. Bank of Sacramento v. Smith, 144 P.2d 665, 62 Cal.App.2d 328.

Insufficient ad damnum in writ

Where jury found for plaintiff and assessed damages at amount agreed on if liability was established, the insufficient ad damnum in the writ would be deemed to have been amended.—Lawry v. Yeaton, 23 A.2d 890, 138 Me. 230.

Percentage of claims

Holding creditors to agreement for acceptance of percentage of value of claims, regardless of failure to make payments within reasonable time, was erroneous.—George N. Sparling Coal Co. v. Colorado Pulp & Paper Co., 299 P. 41, 88 Colo. 523.

Proof of damage

(1) Court may enter judgment for amount of stipulated damages without further proof of damages. U.S.—Fleming v. Myers, C.C.A.Ariz., 159 F.2d 210.

Okla.—City of Wewoka v. Magnolia Petroleum Co., 3 P.2d 182, 151 Okl. 177.

(2) However, there must be proof of damages other than those stipulated.—U. S. v. Oceanic S. S. Nav. Co., C.C.A.N.Y., 56 F.2d 764.

(3) Plaintiff's recovery was limited to maximum amount designated in stipulation notwithstanding evidence showed plaintiff was entitled to recover more.—Colonial Village Restaurants v. Colonial Village, 42 N.E.2d 849, 315 Ill.App. 237.

Interest

(1) In general.

Colo.—Myers v. Coloroda Pulp & Paper Co., 35 P.2d 1020, 95 Colo. 328.

is brought,³⁸ credits against the judgment or decree,³⁹ entry of default judgment, under certain conditions,⁴⁰ fund from which costs payable,⁴¹ grant or denial of relief, on certain conditions,⁴² persons against whom judgment to be rendered,⁴³ and satisfaction of judgment by applying amount recovered by defendant against a third person.⁴⁴ Where the parties by stipulation agree on a definite time for rendition or entry of judgment, strict conformity with the stipulation is necessary, and the court has no jurisdiction to render or enter a judgment after the time so fixed.⁴⁵ Where a stipulation provides for giving the court more time to render decision than is prescribed by statute, rendition of judgment after expiration of the time prescribed is authorized.⁴⁶

A stipulation by parties, permitting the trial court to render and enter judgment in vacation, does not authorize entry of judgment in vacation on findings materially different from those made in term time.⁴⁷

However, a stipulation that the court could sign findings of fact and judgment out of the county and out of term and mail them back does not limit the court to any specific decision announced or unannounced.⁴⁸ A stipulation made subsequent to a decision of the supreme court modifying and affirming the judgment appealed from, which recites that, pending the agreement, rights adjudged to either party by the judgment shall be held in abeyance, does not prevent the successful party from perfecting his judgment and inserting therein the costs allowed on appeal.⁴⁹

A stipulation on the part of plaintiff's attorney that final judgment would not be asked for without first notifying defendant's nonresident counsel, and that no technical advantage would be taken because of counsel's absence, imposed no obligation to notify defendant's counsel of a ruling denying defendant's motion for new trial.⁵⁰ Under a stipulation whereby defendant agreed to convey certain

Persons not parties to stipulation

A judgment, in action for mandatory injunction for removal of obstructions on a right of way created by a declaration of easement, which was based on a stipulation of settlement, was erroneous in so far as it purported to afford affirmative relief against persons who were made parties defendant after action had been commenced and who were not parties to the stipulation of settlement.—Bowler v. § 28. — As to Review

General principles relating to the construction, operation, and effect of stipulations apply to the construction and operation and effect of stipulations relating to appeals and other proceedings for review.

General principles relating to the construction and to the operation and effect of stipulations, discussed supra §§ 11-17 apply to the construction and operation and effect of stipulations relating to appeals and other proceedings for review,⁵³ such as with respect to appeal bonds;⁵⁴ briefs;⁵⁵ consolidation of appeals;⁵⁶ dismissal of appeal;⁵⁷ disposition of the appeal, as by affirmance, reversal, or modification of the judgment rendered below;⁵⁸ participation of justices in opinion of reviewing court regardless

Particular stipulations

(1) No exceptions to be filed or no appeal taken.—McRoberts v. Burns, 88 A.2d 741, 371 Pa. 129.

(2) Allowance of interest if judgment should be affirmed.—U. S. Cas. Co. v. District of Columbia, to Use of North American Cement Corp., 107 F.2d 652, 71 App.D.C. 92.

(3) Joining additional persons as parties bound by decree.—Fojtik v. Lawson, 6 N.W.2d 895, 303 Mich. 568.

(4) Opinion to await decision of another case pending in the United States supreme court.—Campbell v. Department of Labor and Industries, 169 P.2d 245, 25 Wash.2d 966.

Parties

Where appellee had stipulated that moneys owing by other parties to the suit to appellants and claimed by appellee should be paid to designated persons and held pending decision on appeal taken by appellants alone, appellee could not be heard to say there was a defect of parties.—Shepherd v. Haymond, 165 S.W.2d 812, 291 Ky. 780.

Stipulations after appeals

In foreclosure suit, stipulations after appeals were perfected should be enforced, where rights and interests of receiver were sufficiently safeguarded.—Gardner v. Grand Beach Co., C.C.A.Mich., 48 F.2d 491, followed in Grand Beach Co. v. Gardner, 51 F.2d 1077.

Supersedeas

Where parties stipulated that writ of supersedeas might issue, the district court of appeal granted the writ staying the trial pending determination of appeal from order denying motion for change of place of trial.—Willingham v. Pecora, 104 P.2d 405, 40 Cal.App.2d 123.

54. Filing additional bond

Fact that parties stipulated second appeal bond might be filed within five days did not entitle appellant to file third bond where second was defective.—Howland v. Scott, 9 P.2d 824, 215 Cal. 301.

55. Remarks of trial judge

An agreement permitting appellee to print in his brief all or any part of trial judge's remarks is binding on the courts as well as on the parties.—Gorham v. Pacific Mut. Life Ins. Co. of California, 1 S.E.2d 569, 215 N.C. 195.

Withdrawal of motion to dismiss

Where attorney for the people withdrew, in accordance with agreement with defendant, his motion to dismiss appeal on ground that it was not perfected in accordance with statute, attorney was precluded thereby from making such point on defendant's appeal.—People v. Booth, 57 N.E.2d 214, 324 Ill.App. 69, reversed on other grounds 61 N.E.2d 370, 390 Ill. 380.

of presence for argument;⁵⁹ and transcript or bill of exceptions on appeal.⁶⁰ The stipulation of the parties may limit or control the matters or issues to be considered on appeal,⁶¹ but it has been held that the appellate court is not inclined to favor limitation of the scope of its consideration by stipulations, even in instances wherein such stipulations have been entered into fairly and openly by counsel of the respective parties.⁶² Where the parties could not agree on appeal with respect to what was intended to be considered as within the term "records," as used in a stipulation on appeal, the stipulation will be disregarded by the supreme court.⁶³ The agreement of counsel as to proper interpretation of a decree, although not binding on the appellate court, will be given weight.⁶⁴ A stipulation that the judgment be reversed and costs on appeal taxed against respondent has been held sufficient to restore jurisdiction of the trial court over the subject matter of the judgment.⁶⁵

§ 29. — Other Stipulations

The courts have judicially construed stipulations relating to assumption of liability, payment, powers of a receiver, rent, and other particular matters.

In addition to the particular stipulations already discussed supra §§ 18-28, other stipulations have received judicial construction, and their operation and effect have been determined,⁶⁶ such as stipulations relating to allowance of personal expenses to

Confession of error

Stipulation, to effect that trial court's judgment should be reversed and trial court ordered to restate its conclusions of law, so as to state that defendants were, and that plaintiffs were not, entitled to have their title to real estate quieted, was in effect a confession of error by plaintiffs, and, therefore, trial court's judgment in favor of plaintiffs would be reversed and court ordered to restate its conclusions of law, in accordance with stipulations, and enter judgment accordingly.—Stanley v. Phillippe, 105 N.E.2d 173, 122 Ind. App. 369.

Improvident stipulation

Where parties stipulated that if trial judge's direction of verdict in favor of plaintiff in replevin action was wrong, judgment was to be entered for defendants for a return of the goods, appellate court, on sustaining defendants' exceptions, would vacate the stipulation on ground that it was improvident and would award a new trial.—*Lincoln Electric Co. v. Use of wire recorder

Where accused's counsel signed certificate appearing in case-made that the foregoing case-made "contains a full, true, correct and complete copy of the transcript and all the proceedings in said cause," accused could not be heard to complain that the proceedings were taken on a wire recording machine and later transcribed rather than taken in shorthand by court reporter as required by statute.—Antrim v. State, 220 P.2d 846, 92 Okl.Cr. 91.

Damages

(1) A stipulation by counsel that, on review of the cause, the amount of damages as fixed by the judgment was not involved foreclosed further consideration of question of damages.—Oversmith v. Lake, 295 N.W. 339, 295 Mich. 627.

(2) Defendants' contention that evidence showed an amount of damages less than that awarded for medical expenses, etc., could not be considered, where defendants stipulated that defendants would present no question on appeal concerning amount or excessiveness of damages.—Stickel v. San Diego Elec. Ry. Co., 195 P.2d 416, 32 Cal.2d 157.

Error in rejecting evidence benefits contemplated by the stipulation,⁹⁰ or where it has been so acted on that the parties cannot be placed in statu quo.⁹¹ Under some circumstances, however, a party may withdraw from a stipulation or agreement, where there has been no injury to the other party,⁹² and the right to repudiate a stipulation is recognized where it is shown that it was inadvertently or mistakenly made, provided notice is given to the opposite party in sufficient time to prevent prejudice.⁹³

A party may be permitted to withdraw a stipulation if it appears that it was executed by his solicitor without authority and without full knowledge of its contents, and that the party subsequently repudiated the action of the solicitor;⁹⁴ and where a party, by stipulation, inadvertently admitted facts which are not true, he may withdraw such admission on timely notice, provided nothing prejudicial to the adverse party has occurred since it was made.⁹⁵ So it has been held that a stipulation postponing the trial of a case to abide the determination of another may be rescinded, if the case in which the decision is awaited is not determined within a reasonable time.⁹⁶ It has also been held that on a new trial, either party may, as a matter of right, withdraw from and repudiate an agreed statement of facts had at a former trial, by giving proper and timely notice thereof to the opposite party, provided the opposite party is not injured thereby.⁹⁷ If the stipulation is obtained by fraud, it may be repudiated on discovery of the fraud and treated as void ab initio.⁹⁸

Abrogation, waiver, or abandonment. Generally, a stipulation may be rescinded or abandoned by the parties thereto.⁹⁹ Such rescission or abrogation need not be formal,¹ and the stipulation may be abrogated, waived, or abandoned by acts of both parties, which constitute a virtual disregard thereof.² So also, one of the parties may waive the benefit of the stipulation by his acts,³ as where he takes some step in conflict with the provisions of the agreement.⁴ Where a stipulation has been aban-

done after having been found by the court to be inadequate, the court may thereafter properly refuse an offer of admissions contained in the stipulation.⁵

§ 31. Enforcement of Stipulation in General

- a. In general
- b. Methods of enforcement

a. In General

It is generally the policy of the courts to enforce valid stipulations, unless good cause is shown for not doing so, but a stipulation will not be enforced in favor of one who failed to comply with the conditions under which it was made.

Since, as discussed supra § 2, stipulations are favored by the courts, it is the policy of the courts to enforce valid stipulations, unless good cause is shown for not doing so.⁶ Nevertheless, stipulations will not be enforced under all circumstances.⁷ Even though the agreement relates to matters which may be validly made the subject of stipulation, the court, in its discretion, as discussed infra §§ 34-36, may set aside a stipulation on numerous grounds, such, for instance, as fraud, undue influence, or collusion, mistake, false statements innocently made, inadvertence or improvidence in making the stipulation, and on other grounds; and the existence of any of these grounds will constitute sufficient reason for refusing to enforce a stipulation on application of the party relying thereon.

In order that a party may avail himself of the benefit of a stipulation, he must show a strict compliance therewith,⁸ and a stipulation will not be enforced in favor of one who has failed to comply with the conditions under which it was made.⁹ Also, a stipulation will not be enforced if it is contradictory and confusing and stands in the way of a true determination of the rights of the parties,¹⁰ or where it is subject to different constructions and there is a disagreement as to what was intended to be included therein,¹¹ nor will an agreement by counsel be enforced where it is so unreasonable as to carry on its face a presumption of bad faith.¹² Laches in failing to take steps to enforce the stipulation may constitute a sufficient ground to refuse enforcement thereof.¹³

Reason for rule

A stipulation between parties made in open court constitutes not only an agreement between the parties but between the parties and the court, and the court is bound to enforce the agreement for the benefit of the party interested and for the protection of the court's own dignity.—Webster

v. Webster, 14 P.2d 522, 216 Cal. 485—Cathcart v. Gregory, 113 P.2d 894, 45 Cal.App.2d 179.

Discretion

The enforcement of a stipulation, extending the time of defendant to file a sworn answer which is broad enough to cover a demurrer or a motion to strike, is within the discretion of the trial court.—Woods v. First Nat. Bank of Chicago, 41 N.E. 2d 235, 314 Ill.App. 340.

Stipulation in another court

In passing on motion for order to modify subpoenas duces tecum and to limit depositions to be taken in Wisconsin, court would consider only the law applicable thereto after consideration of briefs and arguments of counsel, and would not attempt to determine what the parties had orally stipulated in Wisconsin federal court to which motion was first presented and which did not pass on motion but stayed taking of depositions to permit motion to be presented in Ohio federal court of original jurisdiction, where parties were in disagreement as to what they were supposed to have stipulated in Wisconsin.—Wagner Mfg. Co. v. Cutler-Hammer, Inc., D.C. Ohio, 10 F.R.D. 480.

Jurisdiction. The court in which an action is pending has power to enforce a stipulation entered into between the parties to the action, as long as it retains jurisdiction over the cause and the parties,¹⁴ and the remedy of one who had been injured by disregard of a stipulation must generally be sought in the court in which it was violated,¹⁵ or in some other court of original jurisdiction.¹⁶ A stipulation cannot be availed of on appeal without having first been brought to the notice of the trial court for its adjudication¹⁷ except in cases of stipulations for dismissal of an appeal in which event the appellate court will dismiss an appeal taken in violation of such a stipulation.¹⁸

Stipulations may be enforced in a summary manner on motion, as long as the court retains jurisdiction over the cause and the parties; and enforcement may also be had by action at law, or, if the remedy at law is inadequate, by a suit for injunction, or by some other appropriate remedy in equity.

Stipulations may be enforced in a summary manner on motion, as long as the court retains jurisdiction over the cause and the parties;¹⁹ and such power exists in the court in which the stipulation was made notwithstanding the moving party could have brought an action or an independent proceeding to obtain the relief requested.²⁰ However, the rule as to summary enforcement is applicable only to cases pending and undetermined, and the power and jurisdiction of the court to enforce stipulations in a summary manner in the course of a proceeding cease with the termination of jurisdiction over the cause and parties.²¹ Stipulations may also be enforced by actions at law,²² and, if the remedy at law is inadequate, by a suit for injunction,²³ or by some other appropriate remedy in equity,²⁴ such as specific performance.²⁵

Parties to actions to enforce. Where it is sought to enforce a stipulation by an action at law, general rules govern as to the parties in such an action.²⁶ It has been held that, in an action in which it was sought to enforce an agreement that the action, with others, should abide the result of a certain pending action and be determined by such result, it was not necessary that the parties plaintiff in the other suits mentioned in the agreement should be joined as parties to the present action.²⁷

Summary order. The court in enforcing a stipulation of the parties in open court must make the order sufficiently specific to protect and guard the rights of the parties under the stipulation.²⁸ A stipulation between parties to a suit, to be executed during the term, does not require a contemporaneous order with respect to it, since, the record being in fieri, the order can be entered at any time before final adjournment.²⁹ Where the court refuses to act on a stipulation of the parties, an interlocutory order made thereon, with the intention that it shall take effect on the stipulation being carried out, will be treated as having been revoked, and the stipulation will not be enforced against the parties.³⁰

A party relying on a stipulation as a defense must specially plead it.

Settlement of differences

A party who relies on a stipulation as a defense to an action must specially plead it.³¹

§ 33. Evidence

A stipulation is presumed to be valid and binding. The intention of parties to a stipulation may be shown by testimony, as well as by the terms of the stipulation, where the pleadings put such intention in issue.

A stipulation is presumed to be valid and binding.³² Where defendant by stipulation consented to the amendment of a complaint, equity will not presume fraud in plaintiff's failure to file evidence of consent in procuring the amendment.³³ A party who has agreed in writing that a motion for a new trial be continued until decision of the reviewing court in a companion case is handed down is not estopped to deny the existence of a further oral agreement to abide the result of the companion case, but, when he does so, an issue of fact concerning the existence of the oral agreement is created to be tried by the judge as the trier of facts.³⁴

Admissibility. The intention of parties to a stipulation may be shown by testimony, as well as by the terms of the stipulation, where the pleadings put such intention in issue.³⁵ Where it is not shown that the parties agreed to a stipulation, such stipulation is not admissible in evidence.³⁶ So, where plaintiff's counsel apparently acquiesced in a statement of defendant's counsel that there were no admissions in the case, a written agreed statement as to certain facts is inadmissible when not sufficiently connected with the facts in the case.³⁷ Evidence of any oral stipulation between the parties to treat the pleadings as amended, when they are not, and to show an issue different from that presented by the pleadings on file, is not admissible.³⁸ Where there is no ambiguity in a written stipulation, parol evidence is inadmissible to control or explain its meaning;³⁹ but the judgment record on a former trial is admissible where it is the foundation on which a stipulation of the parties rests, and tends to explain its purpose, scope, and legal effect.⁴⁰

Under a statute providing that an attorney may bind his client to any agreement in respect of any proceeding within the scope of his proper duties and powers, "but no evidence of any such agreement is receivable except the statement of the attorney himself, his written agreement signed and filed with the clerk, or an entry thereof upon the records of the court," only such evidence is admissible to prove a stipulation.⁴¹ Accordingly, under such a statute, it is not competent to prove a disputed parol stipulation by the testimony or affidavits of an adverse party⁴² or his attorney;⁴³ and the record of an agreement between attorneys with respect to a matter in litigation, based on testimony or affidavits offered after the agreement is disputed, constitutes no stronger evidence than the testimony or affidavits themselves, and it is not conclusive on the objecting party.⁴⁴ However, a stipulation may be proved by the statements of the attorney who made it for the person against whom it is sought to be established.⁴⁵

Weight and sufficiency. Applying general rules, evidence in proceedings to enforce stipulations has been held in particular cases to be sufficient⁴⁶ or requires an extraordinary exercise of its powers, which can be allowable and proper only when it is made clear that it is necessary to prevent injustice.⁵³ This discretion is a judicial discretion to be exercised in promotion of justice and equity, and not in subversion thereof,⁵⁴ and it is very generally declared that it will not be exercised to set aside a stipulation unless good cause be shown for doing so,⁵⁵ and unless such action may be taken without prejudice to either party.⁵⁶

It has been said that stipulations may be set aside by the court in the exercise of its sound discretion, when their enforcement would result in serious injury to one of the parties and the other party would not be prejudiced by their being set aside,⁵⁷ and the parties can be restored to the same condition in which they would have been if no stipulation had been made.⁵⁸ On the other hand, relief from a stipulation ordinarily will be denied where the stipulation has been acted on so that the parties cannot be placed in statu quo,⁵⁹ or where one of the parties has received a benefit from the agreement,⁶⁰ or where an undue advantage would result in favor of the party seeking the relief,⁶¹ or where the setting aside of the stipulation would result in serious injury to the other party.⁶² Likewise, a stipulation will not be vacated where the result would be the same in any event.⁶³

Executed contract

The denial of plaintiff's motion to be relieved from stipulation, and entry of judgment on stipulation, was not abuse of discretion, notwithstanding stipulation was not entered on minutes of court and no agreement was filed with clerk of court, where there was no question of exact terms, character, and effect of stipulation, and it was acted on by trial court and plaintiff and defendants, and to such extent became an executed contract and not an executory contract.—Cathcart v. § 35. — Grounds

- a. In general
- b. Particular grounds

a. In General

A stipulation having all the binding force of a contract cannot be set aside on grounds other than those justifying the setting aside of contracts.

The general rule is that a stipulation having all the binding force of a contract cannot be set aside on grounds other than those justifying the setting aside of contracts generally,⁶⁴ such, for instance, as fraud, collusion, mistake, accident, surprise, undue influence, false representations innocently made, inadvertence or improvidence in making the stipulation, or some other ground of the same nature;⁶⁵ and where, by statute, stipulations settling the issues to be tried are made effective as verdicts, the reasons advanced for setting them aside must be as weighty as those required to set aside a verdict.⁶⁶

Generally, the court will afford relief where enforcement of the stipulation would be unjust or give one party an unconscionable advantage;⁶⁷ but it is not a ground for relief against a stipulation that it was disadvantageous to the party asking relief,⁶⁸ or that the case had gone contrary to his expectations.⁶⁹ A trial court may, on a proper application, relieve a party from the effects of a stipulation which admits as a fact that which is not true and is of such a material character as to change the rights of the parties,⁷⁰ but parties will not be relieved from a stipulation as to certain facts in the absence of a clear showing that the matter stipulated is untrue.⁷¹

b. Particular Grounds

- (1) Collusion, duress, fraud, misrepresentation, and undue influence
- (2) Mistake
- (3) Inadvertence or improvidence
- (4) Other grounds

(1) Collusion, Duress, Fraud, Misrepresentation, and Undue Influence

Generally, collusion, duress, fraud, misrepresentations as to material facts, and undue influence constitute sufficient grounds for granting relief against stipulations.

It is very generally held or conceded that duress,⁷² fraud,⁷³ undue influence,⁷⁴ or other overreaching conduct⁷⁵ constitutes sufficient ground for granting relief against stipulations; and collusion between attorneys has also been held or said to be a sufficient ground for relief against a stipulation.⁷⁶ Nevertheless, the discretion of the court to relieve parties from stipulations induced by fraud is a legal discretion to be exercised in the promotion of justice and equity, and there must be a plain case of fraud,⁷⁷ especially when a party, because of changed conditions, will be prejudiced.⁷⁸

False statements innocently made. A stipulation as to the existence of certain facts,⁷⁹ or for the dismissal of a case on the merits,⁸⁰ may be set aside, where it was induced by false representation as to material facts, the falsity of which was unknown to the person making them, although there was no fraud or wrongful intent to defraud or deceive.

(2) Mistake

Courts may set aside stipulations where a mistake of fact is clearly shown, on such terms as will meet the justice of the particular case; but in order to warrant relief the mistake must be of a material character, such as will change the legal rights of the parties, and the mistake must be one which could not have been avoided by the exercise of ordinary care.

As a general rule, courts may set aside stipulations where a mistake of fact is clearly shown,⁸¹ on such terms as will meet the justice of the particular case.⁸² Nevertheless, in order to authorize the setting aside of a stipulation, the evidence of mistake must be clear and convincing,⁸³ and a stipulation will not be set aside on the ground of mistake where all evidence in relation thereto is doubtful and conflicting.⁸⁴ It has also been held that the mistake which will authorize relief against a stipulation must be of a material character, such as will change the legal rights of the parties;⁸⁵ and the mistake must be one which could not have been avoided by the exercise of ordinary care.⁸⁶

Lack of full knowledge of facts. Where there was no mistake of fact, but merely a lack of full knowledge of the facts, which was plainly due to failure to exercise due diligence to ascertain them, this did not constitute a ground for relief against a stipulation.⁸⁷

Mistake of law. According to some decisions, a mistake of law is not by itself a sufficient ground for setting aside a stipulation,⁸⁸ but it has also been held that a court, in the exercise of a sound judicial discretion and in the furtherance of justice, may relieve parties from stipulations entered into under mistake of law.⁸⁹ A mere lack or want of knowl-

Generally, parties to proceeding are bound by their stipulations, but courts will not permit a mistake therein to remain uncorrected when opposite party has not been misled, no delay has been suffered thereby, and documentary evidence of mistake appears in files and record before court.—Thompson v. Continental Motors Corp., 30 N.W.2d 844, 320 Mich. 219—Basner v. Defoe Shipbuilding Co., 29 N.W.2d 140, 319 Mich. 67.

Error based on misinformation

A stipulation, while generally binding, is within court's power to correct where there is an error in stipulation based on misinformation at time of the making of such stipulation.—First Nat. Bank & Trust Co. of Tulsa v. Jones, D.C.Okla., 61 F.Supp. 364.

Law of other state

Motion to be relieved from stipulation of fact regarding law of another state was granted where stipulation was made before rendition of decision of court of such other state, determining law contrary to the stipulation.—Keeler v. Templeton, 300 N.Y.S. 868, 165 Misc. 392, denying motion 298 N.Y.S. 193, 164 Misc. 113.

Mistake apparent from record

Stipulation based on plain mistake of fact, as shown by record itself, will not control over undisputed facts, especially where stipulation states conclusion erroneously arrived at from facts.—Kansas City Life Ins. Co. v. Bancroft, 36 P.2d 288, 169 Okl. 139.

edge of the law or how it will be interpreted or administered by administrative officers is not sufficient ground to release a party from a stipulation.⁹⁰

(3) Inadvertence or Improvidence

Courts may relieve against stipulations inadvertently, inadvisedly, or improvidently entered into which will operate inequitably and to the prejudice of one of the parties, provided all the parties may be placed in the condition in which they were before the stipulation was made.

It has very generally been held that the courts, by reason of the large equitable powers which they have over their own proceedings,⁹¹ and the discretion vested in them,⁹² may relieve against stipulations inadvertently, inadvisedly, or improvidently entered into which will operate inequitably and to the prejudice of one of the parties,⁹³ provided all the parties may be placed in the condition in which they were before the stipulation was made.⁹⁴ However, due regard must be had to the rights of the adverse party so that he is not misled and allowed to act to his injury in reliance thereon.⁹⁵ A stipulation will not be set aside as improvidently made where the circumstances exclude every inference of fraud, collusion, or undue advantage, or the possibility that there was not a thorough understanding of the subject matter and of its terms.⁹⁶

(4) Other Grounds

Mental incompetency of a party to the stipulation, material change of conditions, noncompliance with the terms of the stipulation or failure of condition, or lack of authority of an attorney to enter into the stipulation may constitute ground for granting relief from stipulations.

Grounds, other than those discussed supra subdivisions b (1)-(3) of this section may exist for granting relief from stipulations.⁹⁷

Mental incompetency. It is usually a sufficient ground to set aside a stipulation that one of the parties to it by reason of unsoundness of mind was totally incapacitated to make a contract.⁹⁸ Nevertheless, it has been held that a stipulation will not be vacated on the ground of the incompetency of a party thereto where the stipulation was the result of considerable negotiation in which the interests of the party were well cared for.⁹⁹

Material change of conditions. A stipulation limiting the issues to a certain question may properly be set aside where the condition of the parties has

Unjust or harsh

A court has power to relieve a party from a stipulation in a situation which is unjust or harsh, even when fully understood and authorized.—Bond v. materially changed, if the adverse party is given leave to amend.¹

Newly discovered defenses. A stipulation that one case shall be determined by the judgment in another will not be relieved against because of newly discovered defenses which will not be sufficient ground for a new trial.²

Amendment of pleadings in test case. A stipulation that one case shall abide the result of another will not be set aside because of amendment of the pleadings in the test case on reversal of a judgment rendered therein, where the amendments do not change the cause of action or make any substantial change in the issues.³

Noncompliance with terms of stipulation or failure of condition. Where one party has failed to comply with the terms of the stipulation, the other party may move to vacate the stipulation.⁴ Where plaintiff's attorney consented to the bringing in of a new defendant, on condition that the case should retain its place as a preferred case and be tried in a designated county, if the place of trial is changed to another county, plaintiff should be permitted to move to be relieved from his stipulation, and to dis-

Lack of authority of attorney. If a stipulation or agreement entered into by an attorney is beyond the scope of his authority, the client may, in a proper case, obtain relief therefrom by having it vacated or set aside;⁶ but a stipulation will not be set aside on a mere statement of belief of the attorney's lack of authority to execute a stipulation where positive evidence of such lack of authority, if any, was available and should have been forthcoming.⁷

§ 36. — Proceedings for Relief

A party to a stipulation who desires to have it set aside should seek to do so by some direct proceeding; and, ordinarily, such relief may or should be sought by a motion to set aside the stipulation in the court in which the action is pending, on notice to the opposite party. The proceeding to set aside a stipulation is summary in its nature, and the hearing is usually had on affidavits and counter-affidavits of the parties.

In order to obtain relief against stipulation, regular course is not to ignore or attempt to evade it, but to make reasonable affirmative application to court by formal motion on notice, supported by affidavit for withdrawal or revocation of stipulation.

Request for modification of agreed statement of facts was entertainable by trial court, even though request was made only in brief and not in form of motion, in view of clearly inadvertent use of words.—State v. Wehinger, 47 P.2d 35, 182 Wash. 360.

"Special proceeding"

Defendants' motion to be relieved from stipulation is "special proceeding," which could be commenced before one judge and continued before another; so where justice holds motion to be relieved from stipulation in abeyance pending coming in of report of referee appointed to hear and report, motion remains before court, and, if justice before whom motion is made goes out of office pending reference, matter may again be brought before court by moving to confirm referee's report.—Kynin v. Action held pending

mary proceeding was pending before the court, and, hence, stipulation for stay of execution of warrant, not being one which terminated the proceeding and executed a new agreement, was subject to review and to any order of municipal court made on motion in the proceeding.—Kristel v. Steinberg, 69 N.Y.S.2d 476, 188 Misc. 500.

(2) A stipulation for discontinuance of fraud action on payment of agreed weekly installments of amount demanded in complaint, but providing that on default in payments plaintiff could enter judgment for full amount demanded in complaint, was a stipulation in the case by which action was not discontinued but remained alive, at least until full payment; hence court had jurisdiction to set aside stipulation if extorted by threats or duress.—Pechman v. Chantal Silks, 53 N.Y.S.2d 260.

Court to which appeal is taken from a judgment in the action is without power to set aside the stipulation.—Giroux v. New York Life Ins. Co., 159 A. 142, 85 N.H. 355—60 C.J. p 99 note 95 [a].

sary,¹² as the court has ample control over the action and may protect all the rights of the parties.¹³ Where a stipulation and a purported order approving it are invalid and of no effect, there is no necessity that an application be made for relief therefrom.¹⁴

A proceeding to set aside a stipulation is summary in its nature,¹⁵ and the hearing is usually had on affidavits and counter-affidavits of the parties,¹⁶ although it has been said that, where a large amount is involved and the conflict is sharp, the question should be determined on common-law evidence,¹⁷ and in some circumstances the court will not determine the matter on affidavits but may exercise its investigatory power by referring the matter to a referee to hear and report.¹⁸ Where mistake alleged as a ground in the stipulation is apparent without any further proofs, no affidavits are necessary.¹⁹ Where it is claimed that a stipulation as to facts was false or untrue as to the facts stated, or did not contain all the facts, the party moving to withdraw from the stipulation must show in what particulars the stipulation was erroneous or deficient, that is, he must point out the specific misstatements or omissions.²⁰

The issues raised on a motion to set aside a stipulation ordinarily are to be determined by the trial court, and pending such determination the status quo of the parties will be maintained.²¹ The court may reserve consideration of the motion and need not rule on it immediately on its presentation.²² A party moving to withdraw a stipulation of facts is not entitled to a hearing on the motion where he has failed to file a brief or request oral argument on the motion.²³ No findings of fact are necessary as a basis for an order setting aside a stipulation.²⁴

Time of making application. Application to set aside a stipulation must be seasonably made; delay in asking for relief may defeat the right thereto.²⁵ If parties desire an agreed statement of facts to be amended or discharged, or the facts to be varied, steps must be taken to effect these objects before the decision is announced.²⁶

§ 37. — Nature and Extent of Relief

Generally, if relief against a stipulation is granted, the entire stipulation must be set aside, and the court may not release one of the parties to a stipulation and still leave the other party bound thereby; but under some circumstances the court may modify or amend stipulations where it is satisfied that justice requires it.

Generally, if relief against a stipulation is granted, the entire stipulation must be set aside.²⁷ In other words, the stipulation must stand or else be set aside in toto,²⁸ and merely to strike out a portion of the stipulation on suggestion of one of the parties is error, if such portion is material.²⁹ It has apparently been held, however, that a party may in some circumstances be relieved in part only from the terms of a stipulation, where this may be done without prejudice to the substantial rights of

Loss of jurisdiction

Where defendant signed stipulation on which consent judgment was entered by circuit court, and defendant did not file motion seeking relief from such judgment or motion for new trial, judgment became final thirty days after its entry, circuit court lost jurisdiction, and was not authorized to hear motion filed on later date to set aside stipulation on ground that it was fraudulently procured.—Kidd v. Kidd, Mo.App., 229 S.W.2d 270.

the parties under the stipulation.³⁰ The court may not release one of the parties to a stipulation and still leave the other party bound thereby.³¹ The order setting aside the stipulation is in the nature of rescission, in which all the parties should be placed in statu quo.³²

Amendment or modification. As a general rule, courts have no power to amend or modify stipulations without the consent of all of the parties thereto.³³ Under some circumstances, however, stipulations may be modified where the court is satisfied that justice requires it.³⁴ So it has been held that the court may permit a stipulation to be amended, so as to conform to the real intention of the parties in making it, where matter has been inadvertently inserted in,³⁵ or omitted from,³⁶ the stipulation; and an agreed statement of facts may be amended by the addition of facts inadvertently omitted, where such facts are of record in the court, and require no proof, and are not repugnant to the agreed statement or any of its terms.³⁷ A reviewing court has no power to correct stipulations made in the lower court in order to express the real agreement; the party must have moved in the lower court to have it corrected.³⁸

STIRPS. The word "stirps" means a root¹ of inheritance;² a common stock;³ and it designates the ancestor from whom the heir derives title, and necessarily presupposes the death of the ancestor.⁴

Stirpes. The plural of stirps,⁵ denoting roots or common stocks.⁶ It is said not to be a word of inheritance or purchase but to relate solely to the mode of distribution.⁷

The term "per stirpes" is discussed generally in 70 C.J.S. p 448 notes 52-56; with respect to intestate distribution of property see Descent and Distribution § 23, and with respect to testate distribution of property see the C.J.S. title Wills §§ 707-716, also 69 C.J. p 287 note 30-p 297 note 96.

STITCH. To join together with stitches; sew, as a seam of cloth.⁸

"Stitched" is the past participle of "stitch."⁹ The term is used in book binding to describe the method of binding a pamphlet by stabbing holes in the back, inserting thread or wires, and tying them.¹⁰

common speech and statutory enactments, in a variety of senses, some broader, some more limited.¹⁵

As used in agriculture,¹⁶ the word "stock" has a settled¹⁷ and popular¹⁸ meaning, and signifies domestic animals and nothing more,¹⁹ and thus the term is defined as meaning domestic animals²⁰ or beasts²¹ collected, raised, or used on a farm, especially, cattle, sheep, hogs, etc.²²

While it has been said that in common speech and under the law the word "stock" has reference to animals which have intrinsic value as for food or beasts of burden,²³ in fact the term is sufficiently broad to include all useful animals,²⁴ and therefore the word "stock" has been held to include asses,²⁵ calves,²⁶ cattle,²⁷ colts,²⁸ cows,²⁹ foxes,³⁰ goats,³¹ hogs,³² horses,³³ jennets and mules,³⁴ sheep,³⁵ and swine.³⁶

In a broader sense the term may embrace things other than animals pertaining to the farm.³⁷

In construing particular statutes the word "stock" has been held to apply only to specified animals,³⁸ and hence under the particular statute not to include dogs,³⁹ horses,⁴⁰ or swine.⁴¹

In mercantile sense. When the word "stock" is used in a mercantile sense it has a well-defined meaning,⁴² and an appropriate meaning in law,⁴³ and should be construed accordingly.⁴⁴ In this sense the term signifies the wares of a business man;⁴⁵ the goods and wares of a merchant or tradesman, kept for sale and traffic;⁴⁶ the goods or chattels which a tradesman holds for sale or traffic;⁴⁷ goods and merchandise in trade;⁴⁸ the goods on hand.⁴⁹ It generally comprehends articles accumulated in a business or calling for use and dis-

posals in its regular prosecution,⁵⁰ and is not confined to goods with which a merchant begins business, but rather to the goods he employs in trade.⁵¹ It may include many different kinds of goods, wares, or merchandise,⁵² and in general terms refers to the entire property employed in business.⁵³ It connotes something actual and tangible,⁵⁴ and when applied to a manufactory may refer either to the finished product or to the raw material used in making such product.⁵⁵

The word "stock" is employed with reference to business in a somewhat different sense to signify, in its general acceptation, money invested in business;⁵⁶ and when used in this sense the term means funds employed in some business enterprise.⁵⁷ "Stock" is sometimes used in this sense to denote public funds or securities,⁵⁸ and formerly it was the common term for evidences of government debt.⁵⁹ The most frequent use of the word in this sense is with reference to corporate entities, and when used in this connection it is broadly defined as the sum of all the rights and duties of shareholders, but generally the term is used in a narrower sense, as, for example, to designate capital stock, capital, shares of stock, or certificates of stock, as stated in Corporations § 192.

Trees or plants. "Stock" is sometimes employed to indicate the stalk, stem, or trunk of a tree or other plant; the main body, or fixed and firm part; a stem in which a graft is inserted, and which is its support; also, a stem, tree, or plant which furnishes slips or cuttings.⁶⁰

In the law of descent the word "stock" is defined in Descent and Distribution § 1 as the progenitor of a family or ancestor.

Stock in Trade

The term "stock in trade" is very general⁶¹ and it varies in accordance with the business to which it is applied.⁶² It is usually applied to the stock of merchants and tradesmen,⁶³ and includes articles which cover a very wide range,⁶⁴ and in general everything that is appropriated or necessary to the carrying on of the trade.⁶⁵ In its limited or ordinary meaning, the term applies only to personal property employed by merchants and the like in their trade or business,⁶⁶ or, more specifically, to the visible and tangible property with which the trade or business of the owner is carried on, and to which it relates,⁶⁷ and it includes all chattels which the merchant acquires and puts into his place of business for use in his trade or for the purpose of sale.⁶⁸ It is said to be well understood as meaning

STOCKJOBING. It has been said that the term "stockjobbing" is not defined by law,⁷⁹ but generally it is the business of dealing in stocks or shares; the purchase and sale of stocks, bonds, etc., as carried on by jobbers who operate on their own account.⁸⁰

STOCK-PILE. To heap up; to accumulate in piles.⁸¹

STOCKYARD. The term "stockyard" within the Packers and Stockyards Act of 1921, 7 U.S.C.A. §§ 181-229, is defined in Agriculture § 65. Stockyards as nuisances, see Nuisances § 75 a (5).

STOLEN. See Steal 82 C.J.S. p. 1038 note 56-58.

STOMP. To stamp with the foot.⁸²

Stomping implies an act of violence; the use of the feet applied with force,⁸³ and for that reason is not distinguishable from "kicking" see 51 C.J.S. p 430 note 4.

STONE. Earthy or mineral matter condensed into a hard state.⁸⁴ In its ordinary use, the word is said to cover small pieces of rock or one of moderate size;⁸⁵ and in particular connections it has been held to include "concrete,"⁸⁶ and to mean "limestone,"⁸⁷ but not "limerock."⁸⁸

Stone as a mineral see Mines and Minerals § 2 b (6).

STONECUTTER. One who cuts, carves, or dresses stone.⁸⁹

STONEYARD. As defined by the dictionaries,⁹⁰ the word "stoneyard" means a yard in which stonecutting is carried on;⁹¹ a yard in which stones are cut, shaped, broken, or the like.⁹²

STOOD. See Stand 81 C.J.S. p 846 note 25.

STOOL PIGEON. See 70 C.J.S. p 1059 note 36.

STOOP. In connection with buildings, a front porch; an uncovered platform before the entrance of a house, raised, and approached by means of steps.⁹³

STOP.

As a noun, the term "stop" is defined as meaning a cessation of motion, operation, progress, function, or the like.⁹⁴

As a verb, the word "stop" ordinarily means to cease from some particular motion;⁹⁵ to bring from motion to rest;⁹⁶ to arrest the progress or action of;⁹⁷ to arrest the course, progress, or movement of;⁹⁸ check; hold back;⁹⁹ also, to cause to cease; to suppress.¹

The term "stop" is sometimes used in a loose sense as equivalent to slackening speed,² and it has been said that the words "stop" and "stopping" do not necessarily mean an instant cessation of movement, and are not generally used in that narrow sense,³ and the word "stopped" may have either a permanent or a temporary connotation.⁴

"Stop" has been held synonymous with "obstruct" see 67 C.J.S. p 44 note 93, and it has been distinguished from "continue" see 17 C.J.S. p 282 note 25. It has been said that the difference between the words "stop" and "wait" is infinitesimal.⁵

"Stopping" is said to be the antithesis of "going" see 38 C.J.S. p 933 note 70.

The duty to stop, look, and listen before going across railroad tracks is discussed generally in Railroads §§ 773-790; the duty of children to stop, look, and listen at crossings is discussed in § 806, and of persons under physical disability in § 807.

Phrases employing the word in its various forms are set out in the note.⁶

STOPE. See Mines and Minerals § 3 h.

STOPOVER. Act or privilege of stopping over.⁷

STOPPAGE. Ordinarily the word means the obstruction or hindrance to doing a particular thing.⁸

STORAGE. The term "storage" involves the safekeeping of goods,⁹ or, more specifically, the safekeeping of goods in a warehouse or other depository.¹⁰ The underlying idea of the word is that of holding or safekeeping goods in a warehouse or other depository to await the happening of some future event or contingency which will call for the removal of the goods,¹¹ and as commonly used it is not properly applied to goods or merchandise on hand for immediate sale and disposition.¹² Thus the term connotes a certain degree of permanency and immobility.¹³

"Storage," as used with respect to automobiles, has been distinguished from "parking" see Motor Vehicles § 8.

Municipalities frequently regulate the storage of various articles and in this connection see the index to the title Municipal Corporations. Various legal aspects connected with the storage of explosive substances are treated in the title Explosives, and for specific references see the title index.

senses,¹⁵ and variously defined.¹⁶

As a Noun

English and American lexicographers indicate that the word "store," as applied to a building, is used in a more extensive sense in the United States than it is in England, since in England the term is never applied to a place where goods are sold, but only to a place where they are deposited, whereas in the United States "store" is used to denote both places,¹⁷ and not merely a warehouse, storehouse, or storeroom,¹⁸ and thus in American usage, when employed to designate a place of business, "store"

is regarded as being a broad term.¹⁹

As a place for the sale of goods. The word "store" is employed in a commercial sense²⁰ denoting a place of sale,²¹ and in this sense it has a popular,²² settled,²³ and known²⁴ meaning, and a well-defined legal signification,²⁵ and is said to be well understood by every person.²⁶

As defined in this sense by lexicographers,²⁷ the word "store" means any place where goods are kept for sale,²⁸ or are sold,²⁹ whether by wholesale or retail;³⁰ a place where merchandise is kept for sale;³¹ a place where goods, wares, and merchandise are retailed;³² a shop;³³ as a book store, a dry

ment,⁶⁵ a factory,⁶⁶ a gasoline station,⁶⁷ a granary,⁶⁸ an inhabited place,⁶⁹ a park,⁷⁰ and a restaurant.⁷¹

As a place for the storage of goods. The word "store" is not confined in its meaning to a shop in the sense of an establishment for retail or wholesale trade in goods in the nature of buying or selling,⁷² but it also may denote a place for the storage of goods;⁷³ a place of deposit;⁷⁴ a place of deposit for goods, especially for large quantities;⁷⁵ a place where supplies, as provisions, arms, clothing, or goods of any kind, are kept for future use or distribution;⁷⁶ a storehouse;⁷⁷ a warehouse;⁷⁸ a magazine.⁷⁹

In the sense of quantity. It has been said that the word "store" properly means the quantity of a thing accumulated or deposited.⁸⁰

Stores. The word "stores" is defined as meaning supplies, as of ammunition, arms, or clothing, provided for a special purpose; necessary article, especially of food; as a ship's stores, military stores.⁸¹ Applied to vessels, it is said to be a term more general than "provisions" in that it is not confined to articles of food or subsistence,⁸² but may include such things as anchors, cables, ropes,⁸³ coal,⁸⁴ oil, sails,⁸⁵ or wood⁸⁶ for the vessel's use, as distinguished from goods or merchandise earning freight.⁸⁷

Comparisons and distinctions. "Store" has been held synonymous with "shop" see 80 C.J.S. p 1266 note 84, "storehouse,"⁸⁸ and "warehouse" see the C.J.S. title Warehousemen and Safe Depositaries § 1, also 60 C.J. p 121 note 83 [a].

It has been compared with, or distinguished from, "factory" see Manufactures § 1 c (2), "mercantile establishment" see 30 C.J.S. p 1235 note 88, "restaurant" see Innkeepers § 1 b, "shop" see 80 C.J.S. p 1266 notes 85, 86, and "storehouse."⁸⁹

As a Verb

The term "store" is variously defined as meaning to deposit in a storehouse or other building for preservation;⁹⁰ to keep merchandise for safe custody, to be delivered in the same condition as when received;⁹¹ to stock against a future time.⁹²

"Stored," the past participle of the verb "store,"⁹³ has been said to mean simply placed or located,⁹⁴

but in a limited and technical sense, it has been held to mean delivered as to a warehouseman in exchange for a warehouse receipt;⁹⁵ kept for safe custody.⁹⁶

"Storing," the present participle of the verb "store,"⁹⁷ connotes a certain degree of permanency,⁹⁸ and is defined as meaning the laying away for future use⁹⁹ or for preservation;¹ the act of laying away or furnishing against a future time;² and it may be used to denote a keeping of merchandise for safe custody to be delivered in the same condition as when received, where the safekeeping is the principal object of the deposit, and not a keeping for the purpose of consumption or sale in the usual course of business.³

It has been said that the words "storing" and "use" are not synonyms.⁴

The term "storing" as used in fire policies prohibiting the storing of certain articles is construed in Insurance § 558 b (1).

Phrases

Phrases employing the word "store" are set out in the note.⁵

STOREHOUSE. It has been said that the word "storehouse" is vulgarly used in different senses, and, perhaps, not exactly alike in different parts of the country.⁶ It does not necessarily refer to a house or a building, strictly speaking,⁷ but it may be employed to designate the building, only,⁸ and not to include the stock of goods therein.⁹

The term "storehouse" is employed to designate a building for keeping goods of any kind, especially provisions;¹⁰ a building for keeping grain or goods of any kind;¹¹ a building for the storing of grain, foodstuffs, or goods of any kind;¹² an apartment or building for the temporary reception and storage of goods and merchandise;¹³ a house in which things are stored;¹⁴ a magazine;¹⁵ a repository;¹⁶ a warehouse.¹⁷

17. Mo.—State v. Sprague, 50 S.W. 901, 903, 149 Mo. 409. 60 C.J. p 125 note 19.

The word does not always have the larger meaning of storage house,¹⁸ but is frequently applied to places of business,¹⁹ and thus is sometimes employed as meaning a shop;²⁰ a store;²¹ a building in which goods of any kind are kept for sale;²² a house where merchandise is sold;²³ any place where goods are kept for sale, whether by wholesale or retail.²⁴

The term "storehouse" has been held to embrace a wide variety of places,²⁵ such as a corn crib,²⁶ a garage,²⁷ a grain elevator,²⁸ a granary,²⁹ a grocery store annex,³⁰ a livery stable,³¹ a meat house,³² an opera house,³³ a retail liquor house,³⁴ a saloon,³⁵ a smokehouse,³⁶ a terminal warehouse,³⁷ a tobacco barn,³⁸ an underground gasoline storage tank;³⁹ and a vat for storing hides.⁴⁰

On the other hand, it has been held that the term does not include a building used for offices only,⁴¹ a ginhouse,⁴² a locker,⁴³ a small wine room in a cellar,⁴⁴ or a stock of goods in a building.⁴⁵

"Storehouse" has been held synonymous with "store" see supra p 103 note 88, and to a certain extent is synonymous with "storeroom."⁴⁶ The term has been held synonymous with, and has also been distinguished from, "warehouse" see the C.J.S. title Warehousemen and Safe Depositaries § 1, also 60 C.J. p 125 note 19 [a]—[d].

It has been compared with, or distinguished from, "building" see 12 C.J.S. p 382 note 55.3, "factory" see Manufactures § 1 c (2), and "store" see supra p 103 note 89.

The word "storehouse," as construed in various penal statutes, is treated in Arson § 6 a, Burglary §§ 23 b, 35 e, 53, and Larceny § 12.

STOREKEEPER. The term "storekeeper" is indefinite.⁴⁷ It may mean a wholesale merchant or a petty dealer,⁴⁸ and it may refer to a principal, or to an agent or servant.⁴⁹ It is defined as meaning a man who has the care of a store; one who takes care of a store.⁵⁰

It does not necessarily imply or indicate good credit.⁵¹

STORER. One who or that which stores.⁵²

STOREROOM. A room in a storehouse or repository; a room in which articles are stored.⁵³ The term may contemplate a room in an apartment or flat house set apart and having conveniences such as shelves, hooks, etc., for storage purposes.⁵⁴ While it has been said that the word does not necessarily mean either a storehouse or warehouse,⁵⁵ yet to a certain extent the words "storeroom" and "storehouse" are synonymous as stated supra p 105 note 46.

STORM. It has been said that the word "storm" does not seem to have acquired a legal sense or signification,⁵⁶ and that therefore in ascertaining its meaning recourse must be had to the ordinary standard of definition and interpretation.⁵⁷

As a noun. The word "storm," as a noun, is defined generally as meaning an outburst of tumultuous force,⁵⁸ and it is sometimes used in a figurative sense;⁵⁹ but it more frequently is used with respect to the weather, and in this sense it is connected indissolubly with the idea of violent force, vehement action, turbulent commotion, and disturbance, and it involves some preternatural action of the elements.⁶⁰

Defined with respect to the weather, the word "storm" means a violent agitation or commotion of the elements by winds, etc.;⁶¹ a commotion of the elements;⁶² the violent action of one or more of the meteoric elements, wind, rain, snow, hail, or thunder and lightning;⁶³ a violent disturbance of the atmosphere, producing wind, rain, snow, hail, or thunder and lightning;⁶⁴ a violent wind;⁶⁵ a tempest.⁶⁶

The term does not necessarily imply the fall of anything from the clouds,⁶⁷ but it is often applied to a fall of rain or snow,⁶⁸ and sometimes to a heavy fall of rain, snow, or the like, without wind.⁶⁹

"Storm" has been compared with, or distinguished from, "flood," see 36 C.J.S. p 1028 note 14, "freshet" see 37 C.J.S. p 1379 note 68, "gale" see 37 C.J.S. p 1422 note 17, "hurricane" see 41 C.J.S. p 373 note 83, and "brisk wind."⁷⁰

As a verb. The term "storm" is defined as meaning to blow with violence; also, to rain, hail, snow, or the like, usually in a violent manner, or with high wind.⁷¹ It is also defined as meaning to be, or cause to be, tempestuous; to throw into commotion or tumult; to move about with violence, rage, or fury;⁷² and in a somewhat different sense as meaning to attack by open force.⁷³

Phrases employing the word "storm" in its various senses are set out in the note.⁷⁴

As a narrative. The word "story" is defined in one sense as meaning the facts or events in a given case considered in their sequence, whether or not they are related;⁷⁷ an account of an event or incident; a relation; a recital;⁷⁸ a report;⁷⁹ an anecdote; an account; a statement; anything told.⁸⁰ The term "story" may mean a connected account or narration, oral or written, of events of the past, a narrative, either true or fictitious; specifically a fictitious tale; hence a falsehood; a fib; a lie.⁸¹ In this sense "story" has been held synonymous with "rumor" see 77 C.J.S. p 545 note 72, and "yarn."⁸²

As a part of a building. Applied to a building, the definitions of most general acceptance⁸³ are a set of rooms on the same floor or level;⁸⁴ a floor;⁸⁵ or the habitable⁸⁶ space⁸⁷ between two floors; that part of a building between the top of any floor beams and the top of the floor or roof beams next above;⁸⁸ also, a vertical physical division of a house;⁸⁹ or a horizontal division of a building's exterior considered architecturally, which need not correspond exactly with the stories within.⁹⁰ As used in this sense, the word "story" has been compared with, or distinguished from, "room" see 77 C.J.S. p 539 note 64.1.

STRAIN. The word "strain" is sometimes used to indicate a condition where the members of the body and their muscles are wrenched out of natural shape or are distorted by the application of external force so that a twist results.⁷

As a noun, the word "strain" is defined as meaning distress or harm from overexertion;⁸ the hurt from an injury or from an excessive tension, as of the muscles or nerves;⁹ the physiological effect or injury due to excessive tension or effort.¹⁰ It does not always mean a sprain or an overexertion.¹¹

As a verb, "strain" is defined as meaning to extend with great effort; to extend to the utmost; to stretch beyond its proper limit;¹² also, to injure, as in the muscles or joints, by causing to make too strong an effort,¹³ to injure by pressing to excessive effort;¹⁴ to harm by overexertion.¹⁵

"Strain" has been held to be synonymous with "sprain" see 81 C.J.S. p 838 note 84, "twist,"¹⁶ and "wrench."¹⁷ It has been distinguished from "hernia" see 39 C.J.S. p 896 note 61.1.

Strains suffered by workmen in the course of, and arising out of, their employment are generally regarded as "accidental" injuries compensable under compensation acts, see the C.J.S. title Workmen's Compensation Acts §§ 183-186, also 71 C.J. p 618 note 85-p 622 note 28.

STRAIT. An arm of the sea; a narrow sea between two lands; an inland sea, having connection with the ocean at each end, and lying between a long extent of land on each side of it.¹⁹

STRAND. As a noun, and in one sense, the word "strand" means that portion of land lying between high-water and low-water marks;²⁰ the space on the shore between ordinary high-water and low-water marks;²¹ the shore or bank of the sea or river;²² the beach;²³ the shore or the beach of the sea or ocean or of large lakes;²⁴ the sea beach;²⁵ the flats.²⁶ In this sense "strand" has been held synonymous with "beach" see 10 C.J.S. p 217 note 99, and "shore" see 80 C.J.S. p 1270, note 63.

In a different sense "strand" means a single thread; a string; one of a number of flexible things, as grasses, strips of bark, or hair when used to be twisted or woven together,²⁷ and in this sense it has been distinguished from "yarn."²⁸

The verb "to strand" is defined as meaning to drift or be driven on shore; to drive or run aground on the sea shore.²⁹

"Stranding" is a running upon the shore;³⁰ a taking of the ground which happens from some accidental or extraneous cause.³¹ Stranding occurs

when a ship takes ground, not in the ordinary course of navigation but by accident, or the force of wind or sea, and remains stationary for some time,³² and it implies a settling of the vessel, and some rest or interruption of the voyage, and not merely a "touch and go" situation.³³

In marine insurance terminology "stranding" is a "peril of the sea," as stated in Insurance § 854. See also Insurance §§ 857, 947, 952 c, 955 a. "Stranding" is also treated in Seamen and Shipping; and for specific references see the indexes to those titles. See also the Descriptive-Word Index.

STRANGER. The word "stranger" comes almost directly from the Latin "extra," meaning beyond or outside,³⁴ and, observing all the common and legal definitions of the word, it has only the same value in expressing thought as its Anglo-Saxon counterpart, the word "outsider."³⁵

In legal contemplation, it is well recognized that the word often has a meaning distinctly different from that in common usage,³⁶ and, while in ordinary use, the word "stranger" means "not of the household,"³⁷ in its general legal signification "stranger" is opposed to the word "privy."³⁸

It has been stated that strangers are third persons,³⁹ generally all persons in the world except par-

Method of determining meaning

The most effectual way in which to ascertain the meaning of the word "stranger" wherever used, is to contrast it with some other word in the text of known and fixed meaning.—Succession of Baker, 55 So. 714, 717, 129 La. 74, Ann.Cas.1912D 1181.

ties and privies,⁴⁰ and has the same meaning as though it read "all other persons."⁴¹ When used alone the word "stranger" is generally employed to denote one who is neither a party nor a privy to an act, a deed, or a record,⁴² but the term is generally used in the law with an adjunct, as "stranger to the deed, or to the record," or "stranger to the blood,"⁴³ and when used following other designations of persons it is generally intended to exhaust the whole category of persons within the range of the subject under discussion not included in the terms which preceded it.⁴⁴

While some of the definitions would seem to indicate that the terms "strangers" and "third persons" are synonymous,⁴⁵ the cases definitely establish that these terms are not synonymous.⁴⁶

The right of a stranger to invoke the statute of frauds is discussed in Frauds, Statute of § 220 a. Whether or not payment by a stranger operates as a satisfaction and extinguishment of a judgment, see Judgments § 557.

The term "stranger" as used with respect to the subject of subrogation is considered in Subrogation § 9; and the deposit of an instrument with a third person or stranger who is not a party to the instrument as a requisite to the creation of a valid escrow is discussed in Escrows § 7 a.

STRANGLE. To suffocate by a pressure or constriction of the throat;⁴⁷ to stifle, choke, or suffocate in any manner; especially to interrupt the breathing of, by entering the windpipe;⁴⁸ to deprive a person or animal of air;⁴⁹ also, to be strangled, or suffocated.⁵⁰

It has been held synonymous with "suffocate,"⁵¹ and has been distinguished from "smother" see 80 C.J.S. p 1337 note 9.

STRANGULATED. Constricted so as to prevent the passage of air, noting the trachea; or so as to cut off the blood-supply, noting a hernia or any part encircled by a tight band.⁵²

STRANGULATION. In general, the act of strangling, or the state of being strangled; suffocation by forcible compression or obstruction of the windpipe.⁵³ In pathology, the state of being strangulated; constriction of a part, as of the intestine in hernia, by mechanical means, to such a degree as to cut off circulation.⁵⁴

STRAP. A narrow strip or thong of some flexible material used for securing, holding together, wrapping, etc.; especially such a strip of leather, webbing, or the like, generally fitted with a clasp or buckle, and used for fastening, securing, holding together, etc.⁵⁵

"Strapping," in the fruit industry, means the securing of a metal band around each end of a box of fruit by means of a hand tool weighing only nine or ten pounds; it is done to strengthen the box for further shipment or exportation of the fruit.⁵⁶

artifice;⁵⁹ a trick by which some advantage is intended to be obtained.⁶⁰ The word implies artifice, trickery, deception, and perhaps even positive fraud practiced.⁶¹

STRATEGY. In general, the display or exercise of skill and forethought in carrying out one's plans, schemes, etc.; the use of stratagem or artifice, as in business, politics, or society, or in games.⁶² The term is also used in the operations of armies, conducted by a skillful commander, and implying tact and art in military maneuvering;⁶³ and it has been said that it is not very appropriate to the transactions of civil life.⁶⁴

"Strategy" has been held synonymous with "trick."⁶⁵

STRAW. The general term applied to the stalky residue of grain plants, especially wheat, rye, oats, barley,⁶⁶ and defined as meaning the stalk or stem of certain species of grain, pulse, etc., chiefly of wheat, rye, oats, barley, buckwheat, and peas, cut or broken off, and usually dry;⁶⁷ also, a piece of such a stem;⁶⁸ such stalks collectively, especially after drying and threshing, as, a load of straw.⁶⁹

It has been said that straw is too well known to require any description,⁷⁰ and that a hat made of a leaf is not made of straw in any common or technical sense.⁷¹

The term "straw" is also defined as meaning of no value; worthless; sham; as, a straw bond, straw bail;⁷² and in this sense the word may be applied to a person who holds a naked title for the benefit of another.⁷³

"Straw" has been distinguished from "haulm" see 39 C.J.S. p 781 note 69, and "hay" see 39 C.J.S. p 803 note 12.

Phrases employing the word are set out in the note.⁷⁴

STRAY. An animal found in an unusual place for such an animal; or an animal that has roved for some time in a certain place, whose owner is unknown.⁷⁵

STREAM. Although it has been said that the definition of "stream" has caused the courts some trouble,⁷⁶ and that it is a word without definite legal meaning,⁷⁷ it has also been stated that it has a well-defined meaning.⁷⁸

In a broad general sense, the word "stream" means a flow, a flowing, that which flows;⁷⁹ anything issuing from a source, and moving or flowing continuously;⁸⁰ a continued course or current.⁸¹ Thus the word "stream" implies motion,⁸² and by universal definition conveys the idea of uniform and unbroken succession of movement.⁸³

While the term "stream" may mean anything in fact which is liquid and flows in a line or course,⁸⁴ the word is used technically to distinguish the volume of water of a river, rivulet, or brook from the banks or bed,⁸⁵ and it ordinarily and most frequently⁸⁶ is used with respect to water,⁸⁷ signifying a running⁸⁸ or moving⁸⁹ body of water, a continuous⁹⁰ current,⁹¹ course,⁹² or flow⁹³ of water, in an ascertainable direction between banks or within limits,⁹⁴ and thus is wholly inconsistent with a body of water at rest.⁹⁵

Streams are generally formed by surface waters gathering together in one channel and flowing therein,⁹⁶ and streams usually empty into other streams, lakes, or the ocean.⁹⁷

A stream must have substantial existence,⁹⁸ and must be something more than a mere surface draining, swelled by freshets and melting snow and running occasionally in hollows and ravines which are generally dry.⁹⁹ It must usually run in a definite,¹ defined² bed³ or channel,⁴ and ordinarily consists of bed, banks, and a watercourse.⁵

A stream of water has banks.—Stoner v. Patten, 63 S.E. 897, 898, 132 Ga. 178—Pelham Phosphate Co.

While it has been said that the word "stream" implies a continuous current⁶ in one direction,⁷ it has also been stated that a continuous flow of water is not necessary to constitute a stream, and its waters stream waters,⁸ and that it is not essential in order for it to be classified as such that it flow continuously throughout the year⁹ or throughout its course.¹⁰ Thus a stream does not lose its character as such even though it may break up and disappear,¹¹ nor does a stream cease to be such merely because its course may be opposed by some obstruction, whether natural or artificial.¹² However, if water ceases to remain a channel, and spreads out over the surface of low lands and runs in different directions in swags and flats without any definite channel, it ceases to be a stream.¹³

A stream includes any body of flowing water,¹⁴ such as a river,¹⁵ but tidewaters are not streams within the usual meaning of the term,¹⁶ nor are percolating waters¹⁷ or waters which ooze from a piece of marshy ground.¹⁸

The term "stream" is variously defined as meaning water;¹⁹ a current of water;²⁰ a steady current in a river or in the sea, especially the middle or most rapid part of a current or tide;²¹ a course of running water;²² a current or course of water or other fluid, flowing on the earth, as a river, brook, etc., or

Continuous flow

Unless water flows more or less in a channel and continuously it cannot be described as water which flows in "streams."—McNab v. Robertson, [1897] A.C. 129 (per Lord Shand)—60 C.J. p 138 note 39.

Regular flow

By the term "stream" is understood water which has a regular flow, and not that deposited during times of storm which immediately runs away and leaves in its course a mere stretch of sand and rock.—San Pedro, L. A. & S. L. R. Co. v. Simons Brick Co., 187 P. 62, 64, 45 Cal.App. 57.

Without defined banks

A stream does not become mere surface water because at a certain point it spreads over a level meadow several rods in width, and flows for a distance without defined banks before flowing again in a definite channel.—Blohowak v. Grochoski, 96 N. W. 551, 553, 119 Wis. 189.

References to the term "stream" as a boundary of land are made in the title index to Boundaries.

Thread of stream. The term "thread of stream" means the middle line between the shores, irrespective of the depth of the channel, taking it in the natural and ordinary stage of the water,²⁹ at medium height, neither swollen by freshets nor shrunk by droughts;³⁰ the line midway between the banks at the ordinary stage of water, without regard to the channel or the lowest and deepest part of the stream;³¹ the middle line of the channel, that is, of the hollow bed of running water, when the water is at its ordinary stages;³² that line which would give owners on either side access to the water at its lowest ebb.³³ It has been said that the thread of a nonnavigable stream is the line of the water at its lowest stage.³⁴ The term "thread of stream" means the same thing as "middle of main channel," or "middle of river," and refers to the center line of the main channel.³⁵ The relationship of the thread of the stream and the thalweg is treated in the definition Thalweg, post.

"Thread of stream" has been distinguished from "channel" see 14 C.J.S. p 397 note 15.

The term "thread of stream" is treated in Boundaries § 33, and Navigable Waters § 88. See also

Thread of a private stream

The thread of a private stream is the line midway between the banks at the ordinary state of the water, without regard to the channel or the lowest or deepest part of the stream, and if the land upon one side is gradually and imperceptibly wearing away and soil is deposited upon the other, it is the thread of the stream for the time being, and not that which existed when the opposite owners acquired their titles, which forms the boundary between their estates.—Holmes v. Measurement from low-water mark

Where one bank of a nonnavigable stream is quite precipitous and the other gradually sloping, so that on the abrupt margin the difference between the lines of ordinary and low water does not uncover much of the soil, but on the opposite bank the receding water exposes an extensive bed, the thread of the stream should not be measured from the lines of ordinary high water, but rather should be ascertained from the low-water mark.—Micelli v. I. DEFINITIONS AND NATURE AND STATUS

§ 1. Street Railroad

- a. In general
- b. Essential features and characteristics
- c. Particular terms defined

a. In General

The term "street railroad" or "street railway" may have different meanings as used in different statutes or contexts but it is ordinarily defined as a railroad or railway constructed upon streets or highways for the purpose of facilitating the use thereof in the transportation of persons and property.

The term "street railroad" or "street railway" has not one settled and invariable meaning,¹ but may have different meanings as used in different statutes or contexts.² A street railroad or railway has been defined as a railroad or railway laid down upon roads or streets for the purpose of carrying passengers;³ but in view of the history and development of street railroads a "street railroad" may be more accurately defined as a railroad or railway constructed upon streets and highways for the purpose of facilitating the use thereof in the transportation of persons and property;⁴ an enterprise created and operated to carry on a fixed track passengers and freight, or passengers or freight, for rates or tolls, without discrimination as to those who demand transportation.⁵ In some jurisdictions, for particular purposes, the term "street railroad" or "street railway" has been defined by statute, in which case the term has such meaning as is given to it;⁶ and, as used in some statutes, a "street railway," properly speaking, is only such as is authorized to occupy and use the streets of a city or town, under franchise from the municipality.⁷

A "city railroad," it has been said, is a mere omnibus upon rails, and like an omnibus it stops everywhere along its route, to enable passengers to come in or go out.⁸ The terms "tram railroad"⁹ and "tramroad"¹⁰ are sometimes applied to a street railroad or railway; and "tram railroad"¹¹ and "tramway"¹² have been considered as synonymous with "street railroad," although in some cases a distinction has been said to exist between "street railroad" and "tramway."¹³ "Street railroad" is distinguished from other kinds of railroads in Railroads § 1 a (3).

b. Essential Features and Characteristics

The distinctive and essential features and characteristics of a street railroad primarily are that it is constructed and operated upon and along streets and highways, that it is usually constructed so as to conform to the grade of the street, that it is operated for the transportation of passengers from one point to another in a city or town, and that its cars run at short intervals at a moderate rate of speed, and make frequent stops.

The distinctive and essential features and characteristics of a street railroad primarily are that it is constructed and operated upon and along streets and highways;¹⁴ that it is operated for the transportation of passengers from one point to another in a city or town, or to and from its suburbs;¹⁵ and that its cars run at short intervals,¹⁶ at a moderate rate of speed as compared with the speed of commercial railroads,¹⁷ and make frequent stops, particularly at street crossings to take on and leave off passengers.¹⁸

Method of construction. A distinguishing feature of a street railroad is the fact that it is usually constructed so as to conform to the grade of the street and so as not to interfere with the use of the street by pedestrians and vehicles.¹⁹ However, whether or not a certain railroad is a street railroad is not determined alone by the kind of rails it uses in its tracks,²⁰ or by its position with respect to the surface of the street,²¹ or by the fact that its tracks are laid in, and confined to, the streets of a city;²² but its character usually depends on the general purposes of the enterprise,²³ that is, on the character of its service;²⁴ and, if it is designed and used primarily for street passengers and for their reception and discharge along its route, it is a street railroad without regard to the method of construction or operation,²⁵ or whether it is constructed at grade,²⁶ or upon an overhead structure as in the case of an elevated railroad, as discussed infra § 3, or with cuts and fills,²⁷ or is beneath the surface as in the case of a subway, as discussed infra § 2; or for a part of its route upon property other than streets or highways.²⁸

Motive power. The motive power by which the cars are operated is immaterial as affecting the character of a railway as a street railway,²⁹ whether animal,³⁰ or mechanical, such as electricity,³¹ cable,³² or even steam.³³

Nature of business. Another distinguishing characteristic of a street railroad is that primarily its business is confined to the transportation of passengers and not freight;³⁴ but, if that is its primary purpose, it is none the less a street railroad because of the fact that it also transports freight as a part of its business.³⁵

Numerous particular terms used with respect to street railroads have been defined by the courts.³⁶

Controller. The easily recognized cylinder-shaped electric mechanism of an electric car at the left hand of the motorman, which is operated by a handle which is constantly being swung to and fro, and is the visible means by which the speed of the car is retarded or promoted; as a whole, a device for regulating or controlling the current delivered to an electric motor, and thereby regulating the speed of the car;³⁷ the cylindrically shaped structure or drum stationed on the car platform on top of which is a crank with a handle whereby the motorman operates it, and so effects control of the two electric motors through which the electric current flows.³⁸

Current breaker. A device fixed against the inside of the roof or hood of a trolley car just overhead where the motorman stands, and through which the electric current drawn from the wire on the outside passes.³⁹

Double tracks. Applied to a street railroad, the term means tracks laid on opposite sides of the center of the street, independent of each other and to be operated independently.⁴⁰

Fender or kid catcher. The term "fender," as applied to street railway cars, refers to a guard or protection against danger to pedestrians;⁴¹ a kind of steel basket attached to the front of a car.⁴² The term "practical fender" as used in a statute, refers to a fender fit and proper, or efficient for the use for which it is intended, that is, to protect the life and limb of human beings and animals.⁴³ The term "kid catcher" has also been used as designating a mechanical device carried on street cars, intended to catch objects which strike the tripper in front of the car in a basket or fender, and thus keep them from getting under the wheels and save them from injury.⁴⁴

Greyhound motion. A term used to designate the oscillation of a street car due simply to the speed and constant going, and not to any sudden or abnormal motion.⁴⁵

Horse railroad; horse railroad track. "Horse railroad" is a street surface railroad.⁴⁶ "Horse railroad track" is a term descriptive of the railroad constructed, not of the motive power used.⁴⁷

Messenger cable or messenger wire. The cable, or either of the two cables, supporting the trolley wire of an electric railway in a single or double catenary construction system, in which the trolley wire is suspended from a cable or cables.⁴⁸

Motor. In electric railroading, the motion-producing contrivance in the car.⁴⁹

Quadrilateral system. A term applied to one of the four plans of improving the rail return of electric current in the construction and installment of an electric street railway.⁵⁰

Slot rails. "Slot rails" are those which form the sides of the slot or orifice through which passes the shank of the grip used in the operation of a cable.⁵¹

Station. The term "station" as applied to street railroads may mean the place where the car stops,⁵² although it is somewhat out of the ordinary to call a mere street corner in a city a station.⁵³ The term has also been construed to mean not only such stations for the receipt and discharge of freight and passengers, but also those points on the lines of railroads after passing which an additional fare is charged to passengers.⁵⁴

(2) Cable Railroad and Related Terms

A cable railroad is a railroad in which the motive power is generated in a stationary engine and imparted to an endless cable, which runs under the roadway and to which cars are attached by means of a grip usually joining through a slot in the roadway.

A "cable railroad" is a railroad in which the motive power is generated in a stationary engine and imparted to an endless cable, which runs under the roadway and to which cars are attached by means of a grip usually joining through a slot in the roadway.⁵⁵ The term implies a street railroad.⁵⁶

Cable car. A car operated by means of a steel cable or rope in the tracks beneath the surface, to which a large metal grip is attached, or from which it is released, by means of what may be termed a "handle" to the grip, which extends from the grip through a slot in the track up into the grip car, where the gripman stands and operates the car;⁵⁷ a car fitted to run on a cable railroad.⁵⁸

Cable system. The term with respect to street railways is generally understood to imply a stationary engine and an underground cable.⁵⁹

"Coasting" of a cable car means moving on the car's momentum, without gripping the cable.⁶⁰

Governor. As used in connection with the propulsion of street cable cars, a device attached to the engine used to propel the cable by the automatic action of which a certain rate of speed may be maintained without variation.⁶¹

Grip and grip car. The term "grip," as applied to cable street railroads, means a device attached to cable cars to grasp the cable.⁶² "Grip car" is the forward car of two cars of cable street railroads which is open on all sides, but provided with seats for passengers; so called because it contains the apparatus called the "grip" by which attachment is made to the cable underneath the tracks.⁶³

(3) Street Car

Street cars are defined as cars which traverse the streets of a town or city, and carry passengers, who get on and off at various points along the line; they are vehicles of street travel, or public conveyances.

"Street cars" are cars which traverse the streets of a town or city, and carry passengers, who get on and off at various points along the line.⁶⁴ They are vehicles of street travel,⁶⁵ or public conveyances,⁶⁶ and may be considered to be omnibuses or vehicles in the nature of omnibuses.⁶⁷ They have been held to be "cars" within the meaning of that term as used in some statutes,⁶⁸ but under other statutes the word "car" does not include a street car.⁶⁹

"Open car," with respect to a trolley line, is a car with a running board upon each side, from which the conductor collects fares and discharges his general duties in the premises.⁷⁰ "Summer street car" is also a term commonly used to denote a car open from top to bottom on the sides from which people enter and depart by stepping on what is called a "running board."⁷¹

Convertible car. A "semi-convertible car" is one the construction of which is such that the side of it is not open to the floor when the movable panels are removed so as to make an open car,⁷² or where the lower panel is not removable,⁷³ but forms an integral part of the car.⁷⁴ A "wholly convertible car" is one the sides of which, from the floor to the roof, are composed of panels and ribs or posts, and which panels may be removed in some way to some place so as to make a car wholly open on all sides.⁷⁵ A "self-contained convertible car" is one which somewhere within it has the storage for the panels when removed from the sides, either by pushing them up or down or sidewise, or removing them from the sides entirely, so as to form the necessary openings.⁷⁶

"Subway" is a term used to designate an electric railroad under the street surface, and a railroad so constructed may, by reason of its design, use, and the character of service which it renders, constitute a street railroad.

"Subway" is a term used to designate an electric railroad under the street surface.⁷⁷ A railroad may by reason of its design, use, and the character of service which it renders constitute a street railroad notwithstanding it is beneath the surface of the street or highway as in the case of a subway.⁷⁸ So it has been held that an underground railway following the line of the street within the limits of a city or village is a street railway;⁷⁹ but an underground tunnel railroad with a large portion of its route beneath a river, and much of it built on upon private property has been held not a street railroad.⁸⁰

§ 3. — Elevated Railroad

An elevated railroad is a railroad which is placed above the surface of the street, and is used by the general public; and such a railroad may by reason of the character of the service it renders constitute a street railroad.

An elevated railroad is a railroad which is placed above the surface of the street, and is used by the general public.⁸¹ A railroad may by reason of the character of the service it renders constitute a street railroad notwithstanding it is constructed upon an overhead structure as in the case of an elevated railroad.⁸² It has been held, however, that an elevated railroad is not a street railroad where it is organized under a general railroad act, notwithstanding its business, by municipal regulation, is limited to carrying passengers.⁸³ It has also been held that an elevated railroad is not a street railroad where steam is its motive power;⁸⁴ but other authority holds that, although such a road is authorized to use steam as a motive power, where its route lies almost exclusively through the public ways, and its purpose is to give more rapid transit

§ 4. — Interurban Railroad

An Interurban railroad has been defined as a railroad, operated by power other than steam, which extends beyond the limits of a city or town to the limits of another city or town. It has in some respects the characteristics of a street railroad, and it is for some purposes, under some statutes, classified as a street railroad.

An "interurban railroad" has been defined as a railroad, operated by power other than steam, which extends beyond the limits of a city or town to the limits of another city or town.⁸⁶ It has in some respects the characteristics of a street railroad,⁸⁷ and, in view of the fact that it is an outgrowth⁸⁸ and development⁸⁹ of the street railroad, it is for some purposes, under some statutes, classified as a street railroad.⁹⁰ Within the limits and suburbs of the cities or towns which it enters an interurban railroad usually passes along the streets, and performs the ordinary functions of a street railroad and is classed as such;⁹¹ but a railroad built wholly upon private property and the cross streets, and engaged in interurban traffic, is not within the contemplation of the term "street railroad;"⁹² and also, outside the cities on its way from one city or town to another, it frequently travels upon a roadway obtained from private persons, not upon a public road, and stops, as in case of ordinary railroads, only at stations established by it for that purpose,

§ 5. — Nature and Status

A street railroad is a public utility and is peculiarly an institution for the accommodation of people in cities and towns.

A street railroad is a public utility⁹⁴ and is peculiarly an institution for the accommodation of people in cities and towns;⁹⁵ it is not chartered and granted a location for the benefit of the promoters or owners, but for the accommodation of travelers.⁹⁶ It is a work of internal improvement,⁹⁷ although it cannot be considered strictly a street improvement.⁹⁸

Streetcars are subject to the immediate control of their owner and operator and, by virtue of their dedication to public service, they are for the common use of all their passengers.⁹⁹

Street railroad as a highway or part of a highway is considered in Highways § 1.

§ 6. Street Railroad Company

A street railroad company is a corporation by which a street railroad is conducted, maintained, and operated.

A street railroad company has been defined as a corporation by which a street railroad is conducted, maintained, and operated.¹ It does not include a railway company which operates its line on a

§ 7. — Nature and Status

A street railroad company is a quasi-public corporation, and its rights and liabilities are to be construed and measured by the law applicable to such corporations; it is a private enterprise subject to such restrictions and regulations as the statutes may prescribe or the municipality is authorized to impose.

A street railroad company is a quasi-public corporation,⁵ and its rights and liabilities are to be construed and measured by the law applicable to such corporations.⁶ It is also a "public service corporation" subject to state and municipal supervision as such,⁷ and it holds special privileges conferred in consideration of its providing public transportation facilities, as agent and trustee of the sovereign power.⁸ At the same time, however, notwithstanding it is given corporate existence to enable it to provide the means of rapid transportation for the convenience of the people and the promotion of the public welfare,⁹ it is a private enterprise subject to such restrictions and regulations as the statutes may prescribe or the municipality is authorized to impose.¹⁰ The property of street railroad companies is private property, although devoted to public use.¹¹

A street railroad company is a common carrier of passengers, as discussed in Carriers § 532, and under exceptional circumstances may become a carrier of goods, as discussed in Carriers § 6 c (7).

Protection of courts. A street railroad company is entitled to the same protection at the hands of the courts as the law affords individuals.¹²

§ 8. Constitutional and Statutory Provisions in General

General rules apply with respect to the construction, operation, and repeal of statutes relating to street railroad companies or corporations, and such statutes are valid where they constitute a legitimate exercise of legislative power and are within constitutional limitations.

General rules apply with respect to the construction, operation, and repeal of statutes relating to street railroad companies or corporations.¹³ Such statutes are valid where they constitute a legitimate exercise of legislative power and are within constitutional limitations,¹⁴ but they are invalid if they violate the constitution.¹⁵ Statutes relating to steam railroad companies may be inapplicable to street railroads.¹⁶ company may be incorporated under a general railroad incorporation act, in the absence of a special statute under which incorporation could be had.

The incorporation and organization of a street railroad corporation are governed by the rules of law regulating the organization of corporations in general, except in so far as affected by special statutory provisions relating to street railroad companies.¹⁷ In order that a street railroad company may be entitled to corporate existence, as a legal entity, with the right to own, construct, and operate a street railroad, it must be incorporated or organized in compliance with the laws of the state regulating the organization of such a corporation,¹⁸ such as with respect to the minimum number of persons who may unite to form the corporation;¹⁹ and, where an application for a charter is in conformity with the requirements of the statute, it should be granted.²⁰

Under general or special statute. Since the term "railroad" or "railway" is a generic term sufficiently broad to include street railroads, as discussed in Railroads § 1 a (3), a street railroad company, in the absence of a special statute under which incorporation could be had, may be incorporated under a general railroad incorporation act,²¹ and a street railway and an electric railroad designed to run beyond the municipal limits may be incorporated under the same charter.²² It has been held that a street railroad company may be organized under a statute providing for the incorporation of industrial corporations generally.²³ Where, however, special statutory provision is made for the organization of street railroad corporations, the general railroad law does not apply to the formation of a street railroad company,²⁴ and, unless the right to do so is authorized by statute, a company formed under such law cannot construct or operate a street railway,²⁵ except where it was organized prior to the street railroad act, and is recognized as valid by such act.²⁶ The right of a company organized under a street railroad statute to construct and operate a street railroad is not affected by the fact that the statute also contains provisions which are usually inserted in special charters granted to railroad companies.²⁷

Special charter. Where a general law relating to the incorporation of railroad companies does not apply to street railroads, the legislature may grant a special charter to a street railroad company,²⁸ and in doing so may authorize it to extend its line beyond the limits of the town or city in which it is to be located.²⁹ Where a general law is passed by the legislature, giving its consent to the continued existence of street railroad companies previously organized under special charters, a prior specially chartered company, after its acceptance of the provisions of the statute, becomes a de jure corporation, with all the powers granted in the charter³⁰ or conferred by the general law,³¹ without procuring a reincorporation under the general law;³² and this rule applies, although the charter may have been originally granted unlawfully³³ or under an invalid statute.³⁴

Organization by purchaser. A statutory provision authorizing the purchaser of a street railroad at a judicial sale to organize a corporation is not limited to the first or immediate purchasers at such sale, but extends to subpurchasers;³⁵ and, where such subpurchasers, in compliance with the statute, organize a corporation and transfer all the rights, powers, privileges, and franchises held by the original street railroad, the later company is entitled to exercise all of the rights, privileges, and franchises previously granted to the original corporation.³⁶

§ 10. Certificate or Articles of Incorporation

The certificate or articles of incorporation must comply with all the statutory requirements for a street railroad company. When accepted by the company the charter becomes a contract, and the company thereby consents to be bound by its provisions and conditions.

The certificate or articles of incorporation must comply with all the statutory requirements for a street railroad company,³⁷ such as with respect to the board or officer by whom they may be made,³⁸ to containing provisions relating to forfeitures,³⁹ to describing the plan and mode of construction,⁴⁰ and to stating with reasonable certainty the termini and route of the proposed road,⁴¹ although a more specific designation of the termini may be dispensed with by a later act of the legislature which recognizes the company as a valid existing corporation.⁴²

Where the filing of the articles of association is regarded merely as a preliminary step to the obtaining of a charter, the incorporators have no standing as a corporation until letters patent are issued;⁴³ but, where the statute provides that the persons associated constitute a corporation from the time of filing a proper certificate in the office of the secretary of state, it is not necessary that stock be issued or paid up before a valid organization can be effected or corporate action be taken.⁴⁴ When accepted by the company the charter becomes a contract,⁴⁵ and the company thereby consents to be bound by its provisions and conditions.⁴⁶

As to conflicting routes. Articles of incorporation will not be issued to a company for the construction of a street railroad over a route which an existing company has a right to occupy by an extension of its line, and for which a record of the extension has already been filed.⁴⁷

§ 11. Reorganization

A reorganization plan of a street railway company and a sale of its property thereunder will be upheld by a court where the plan is fair and equitable and has been approved by a majority of the interested persons. The necessary documents involved in the reorganization of a street railroad company must all be construed together where they constitute one entire scheme of reorganization and refer to, and are dependent on, one another.

A reorganization plan of a street railway company and a sale of its property thereunder will be upheld by a court where the plan is fair and equitable and has been approved by a majority of the interested persons, notwithstanding objections relating to the inadequacy of the bid, and to the amount, terms, and distribution of securities to be issued under the plan;⁴⁸ but, where an ordinance for a new franchise lapsed because of nonacceptance by the grantee, final action on the plan for reorganization will be deferred pending application for a new ordinance and ascertainment of its terms.⁴⁹ Persons whose rights are otherwise adequately represented and protected are not entitled as of right to intervene in reorganization proceedings for the purpose of attacking actions of the court.⁵⁰ Where no plan or agreement is made at, or previous to, the

Owner of first mortgage bonds and owners of certificates for bonds on deposit with bondholders' protective committee were not entitled as a matter of right to intervene in reorganization proceedings, for purpose of attacking actions of the court, even if intervention was sought in good faith, but, in view of fact that bondholder was represented by mortgage trustee and certificate holders by committee, intervention was discretionary, in absence of support for charge of conspiracy between trustee, committee, and junior bondholders.—In re Schommer, supra.

sale of the property and franchises of a street company by the purchaser in anticipation of the readjustment of the respective interests of the creditors, mortgagees, and stockholders, the formation of another corporation by the purchaser of independent parts of the property and franchises of the company is not a reorganization of the old company.⁵¹

Statutory provisions that no railroad corporation shall exercise any franchise without the permission of the proper public service commission, unless it was entitled to do so prior to the creation of such commission, and forbidding the transfer of such a franchise without the commission's approval, do not apply to a reorganized street railroad corporation, formed to take the property and franchise of a street railroad corporation sold under foreclosure, since the right of the bondholders under the mortgage to have the property sold and the right of the purchasers are inviolable, and no consent can be made a prerequisite to either the enjoyment or transfer of the franchise.⁵² The reorganized company, however, is subject to the supervisory powers of the commission over the issuance of stocks and bonds,⁵³ although the commission may not refuse permission to the new corporation to issue stocks and bonds, not exceeding the amount of outstanding securities of the old corporation, notwithstanding such securities are in excess of the value of the property of the corporation.⁵⁴

The necessary documents involved in the reorganization of a street railroad company must all be construed together where they constitute one entire scheme of reorganization and refer to, and are dependent on, one another.⁵⁵ Such construction is required in determining the relative rights of certificate holders and bondholders.⁵⁶ The status of holders of certificates issued under a street railway reorganization plan is not exactly that of stockholders,⁵⁷ and they may be estopped to question orders of the state public service commission with respect to application of funds of the company to improvements.⁵⁸ A finance committee created under the reorganization plan may have authority, in a proper case, to withhold payment of dividends to certificate holders from accumulated earnings;⁵⁹ but, where such earnings are available for distribution to security holders, the certificate holders are entitled to some protection, such as payments in cash or a lien on the property, to the extent of the undistributed earnings.⁶⁰

Insolvency. In determining the solvency of a company at the time of reorganization for the purpose of deciding whether a provision for unsecured creditors is fair, the rate-base value as determined in an action to increase fares is not conclusive, since the actual value or fair and reasonable market value is not the value taken into account in such valuation,⁶¹ and the reorganized company is not precluded by such rate-base value from asserting insolvency during receivership, under the doctrine of res judicata, since, when the proceeding was begun and prosecuted, the functions and authority of the old company over its property were suspended and the new company was not yet in existence.⁶²

§ 12. Officers and Agents

Except in so far as they are regulated by special statutory or charter provisions, the law applicable to the officers and agents of corporations in general governs questions relative to the officers and agents of a street railroad company.

Except in so far as they are regulated by special statutory or charter provisions,⁶³ the law applicable to the officers and agents of corporations in general governs questions relative to the officers and agents of a street railroad company.⁶⁴ Thus, the president and secretary of a street railroad company have no inherent or implied power to bind the company by the execution of promissory notes,⁶⁵ but the board of directors may bind the stockholders by its acceptance of a franchise;⁶⁶ and, in cases of emergency or accident, the acts and contracts of the corporate representatives in charge at the time may be binding on the company,⁶⁷ especially when such acts or contracts are ratified.⁶⁸ A street railroad company is chargeable with knowledge acquired by an officer or agent with respect to matters within the scope of his employment.⁶⁹ An investigator and adjuster, who acts under the direction of the attorney of the claims department, and whose authority is limited to investigating an accident and communicating the attorney's offer, has no authority to settle a claim against the company.⁷⁰

§ 13. Capital, Stock, and Stockholders

The rules governing the capital and stock of corporations in general apply to questions relating to the capital and stock of a street railroad corporation, except to the extent that such questions are controlled or modified by special provisions of law relating to street railroads. Street railway companies have the right to issue preferred stock where such issue is authorized by the stockholders acting in accordance with the statute in force.

The rules governing the capital and stock of corporations in general apply to questions relating to the capital and stock of a street railroad corporation,⁷¹ except to the extent that such questions are controlled or modified by special constitutional or statutory provisions relating to street railroads,⁷² such as with respect to the issuance of stock⁷³ and the distribution of dividends.⁷⁴ A commission having power to supervise and regulate a street railroad, in authorizing an issue of stocks or bonds, may determine the price and condition of their sale,⁷⁵ but cannot indirectly prevent such issue, in a proper case, by imposing impossible or unnecessary conditions.⁷⁶ Where the commission properly decides that it cannot, under existing conditions, order cancellation of common stock, it cannot be canceled by indirection, by withholding from the company that to which it otherwise would be entitled.⁷⁷

Preferred stock. Street railway companies have the right to issue preferred stock where such issuance is authorized by the stockholders acting in accordance with the statute.⁷⁸ Stock issued to holders of bonds in exchange for such bonds is preferred stock and not certificates of indebtedness where the stock is designated as preferred stock and the holders are given the right to vote and to receive fixed yearly dividends.⁷⁹ Where a special statute authorizes a street railroad company to issue preferred stock and provide for its retirement without the consent of the holders thereof, such provision becomes an inherent quality or infirmity of such stock when issued,⁸⁰ and holders thereof, having made their investment on that basis, may not complain of its retirement;⁸¹ and a provision of a proposed law, for the retirement of the stock of minority nonassenting holders at a price to be ascertained by appraisal of value by commissioners or by trial by jury, is adequate;⁸² and a further provision of such law, that in ascertaining such value any enhancement or diminution thereof arising from the statute itself or a lease of the property to the commonwealth should be disregarded, is valid.⁸³

Holders of preferred stock, authorized by statute, can claim no rights in addition to those therein stipulated with respect to the voting power of the stock being the same as that of other stock;⁸⁴ and where a further issue of preferred stock is made under a special statute which does not specify any voting power, holders thereof are on the same basis as to voting as holders of other classes of preferred stock issued under the statute providing for voting power.⁸⁵

special statute providing for the organization of a street railroad company for the purpose of acquiring an old street railroad company provides for the appointment of trustees to take over the property of the old company, the intention is that the street railroad should be operated as a going concern,⁸⁶ and that the trustees should act for the interests of the corporation, its creditors, and stockholders;⁸⁷ and, where the trustees are authorized to use discretion in the management of the company, their decision in applying earnings to the restoration of property, if in good faith, is final,⁸⁸ unless contrary to law.⁸⁹ Where the cost of service which rates and fares of the street railroad are to be fixed to meet is to include maintenance, operating expenses, dividends in a stated amount, and allowances for depreciation and rehabilitation as the trustees deem adequate, dividends are not contemplated until the railroad is restored to a safe and proper condition;⁹⁰ and, since the trustees are authorized to allow for depreciation as part of the cost of service, expenses for depreciation and restoring the property and thereby keeping the capital intact are operating expenses, and are not betterments to be charged to capital,⁹¹ and the discretion of the trustees in incurring such expenses before paying dividends is not abused.⁹²

Stockholders. The elementary principle, that, in the absence of any charter provision to the contrary, a majority of the stockholders controls in deciding ordinary corporate questions requiring their action, applies in determining the rights of stockholders of a street railroad corporation.⁹³ Such stockholders, in a proper case, may sue to rescind a fraudulent contract.⁹⁴ The stockholders of a street railroad company have been held to be within the meaning of statutes defining the liability of stockholders of railroad corporations,⁹⁵ but a constitutional provision which excepts stockholders of "railroad corporations" from individual liability for corporate debts thereby imposed on stockholders of other corporations for profits has been held not to include stockholders in street railroad corporations.⁹⁶ Under a statute which imposes on stockholders of a street railroad corporation liability for all of the corporation's debts in the event that such stockholders knowingly receive any dividend paid in impairment of its capital, a remedy exists against stockholders regardless of any other provision for enforcement of individual liability of stockholders,⁹⁷ and such remedy may be sought by suit in equity in another state.⁹⁸ Accordingly, a holding company may be held liable, in a proper case, for debts of a subsidiary street railroad company.⁹⁹ Liability of stockholders under such a statute may be enforced at the suit of bondholders,¹ regardless of a clause in the mortgage given by the street railroad company prohibiting recourse to stockholders.²

§ 14. Powers of Company in General

A street railroad corporation possesses only such powers as are expressly given or are necessary incidents to the enjoyment of the powers expressly granted. It has capacity to acquire and hold such rights and property, both real and personal, as are necessary to enable it to transact the business for which it was created.

Like other corporations a street railroad corporation possesses only such powers as are expressly given or are necessary incidents to the enjoyment of the powers expressly granted;³ and, where it clearly acts beyond its corporate powers and franchises, no consent by a municipality can supply the want of power.⁴ It has capacity to acquire and hold such rights and property, both real and personal, as are necessary to enable it to transact the business for which it was created;⁵ and it may, in a proper case, issue negotiable paper,⁶ or make a valid contract to furnish or pay for medical aid to one injured on its cars or tracks.⁷ The fact, however, that a street railway company is authorized to operate by electricity or other motive power does not authorize the conducting of an ordinary commercial railroad,⁸ and charter authority to construct, operate, and manage a street railway in a city and vicinity, if granted a right of way by council, and to lease, operate, or intersect with other street railways, does not authorize the operation of a street railroad on the line of an interurban railroad.⁹ A street railroad company usually has no power, by virtue of its charter, to pave the streets of a city independently of the consent of the city.¹⁰

Other authorized purposes. A general statute authorizing a corporation to extend its business to other authorized purposes authorizes a street railroad company to amend its charter so as to extend its termini, and thereby carry the public a greater distance for the same fare,¹¹ or so as to include the right to buy or lease a road already constructed.¹²

Relinquishment of duties. The acceptance of its franchise by the railroad charges it with certain well-defined public duties which it cannot at will cast aside and repudiate so as to defeat the purpose of its organization.¹³

Collateral enterprises. Where power to do so is not given by the charter or by statute, a street railroad company has no power, by virtue of a permit from the city to string electric wires, to use such wires to distribute power to private consumers.¹⁴ It has been held that leasing advertising space in a streetcar is not within the corporate powers of a street railroad company;¹⁵ but, on the other hand, it has been held that advertising is incidental to the running of cars,¹⁶ and that the placing of advertisements in its cars is within the corporate powers of the company;¹⁷ and the fact that the street franchise granted to the company is silent on the matter of advertising does not restrict such power.¹⁸

§ 15. Carriage of Freight

A street railroad ordinarily has no power to do a freight business, unless it is authorized by statute or its charter to do so.

Ordinarily, as discussed supra § 1, a street railroad is one for the transportation of passengers, and such a railroad has no power to do a freight business,¹⁹ unless it is authorized by statute or its charter to do so.²⁰ Thus, under a statutory provision which authorizes such companies to convey "persons and property," a street railroad company, whether specifically chartered or organized under general laws, may carry freight for hire²¹ and may operate cars designed and intended exclusively for carrying express matter, freight, or property, and used exclusively for that purpose.²² Where authority as to use of the streets is consistent with the purpose for which the streets exist, it will not be restrained or declared a nuisance at the instance of an abutting property owner;²³ and, where it is given to an interurban street railroad company, it is not objectionable as extending the powers of such company over the streets of a city without its consent.²⁴

Authority, however, to transport passengers, freight, baggage, etc., gives no right to use a portion of a street, designated as a station, for loading and unloading freight.²⁵ Under a statute giving railway companies the right to transport light freight and property, the purpose stated in the articles of association to construct and operate a street railway for the conveyance of passengers is sufficient to indicate the right to carry light freight as incidental to the primary purpose.²⁶

§ 16. Auxiliary Bus Lines

A street railroad company may be authorized by statute to operate auxiliary bus lines.

A statutory provision extending the corporate powers of street railroad companies to include the power to own and operate motor vehicles for the transportation of passengers authorizes such a company to operate auxiliary bus lines.²⁷

§ 17. Amendment or Modification of Charter

Under power to alter, amend, or repeal reserved at the time of granting the charter, or conferred by constitution or statute, the body which granted the charter of a street railroad company may alter or amend it, either on its own initiation or on application of the company, provided its action is not arbitrary or destructive of vested rights acquired in good faith under the charter.

Under power to alter, amend, or repeal reserved at the time of granting the charter, or conferred by constitution or statute, the body which granted the charter of a street railroad company may alter or amend it, either on its own initiation or on application of the company,²⁸ acting through its authorized representatives,²⁹ provided its action is not arbitrary or destructive of vested rights acquired in good faith under the charter.³⁰ The charter may be amended or altered by a subsequent statute, extending or limiting its powers, without an actual amendment of the articles of incorporation,³¹ and, if the statute imposes no condition of acceptance, the exercise by the company of the powers granted implies acceptance thereof.³² The municipality cannot object to any amendment of the charter, by statute, in respect of a duty due to the state;³³ and, where the charter contract is with the state alone, the municipality in which the street railroad is constructed and operated cannot add to the rights and privileges conferred or detract from the duties and obligations imposed by the charter.³⁴

Where on application for such an amendment all the preliminaries required by statute are fully complied with, a board, whose duties in granting the amendment are purely ministerial, cannot refuse the application.³⁵ The right of a prior existing street railroad company to alter or amend its charter under a statute giving it such right is not affected by a later statute which provides a method for the alteration and amendment of street railroad charters, but which also provides that it shall not affect the rights, etc., of existing corporations.³⁶ A statutory provision authorizing street railroad companies to amend their charters does not apply to a consolidation of two or more companies.³⁷ An amendment or supplement does not discharge the company from contractual obligations previously undertaken,³⁸ or modify the express terms of contracts thereafter entered into by the company.³⁹

a repeal of its charter, other than those expressly agreed on.⁴⁴ A statutory provision which takes away merely some of the powers given to a street railroad company does not constitute a revocation of all of its charter powers;⁴⁵ and an injunction whose only effect is to keep the company within the limits of its charter does not operate as a repeal thereof.⁴⁶ It has been held that proceedings, such as quo warranto, may be maintained against a street railroad company to vacate its charter or annul its corporate existence, for a violation of a municipal ordinance which granted it the right to occupy and use the public streets for the purposes of its railway.⁴⁷

III. RIGHT TO CONSTRUCT AND OPERATE IN GENERAL

§ 19. Source and Nature of Right

The right to construct and operate a street railroad upon and along the streets of a municipality is not a natural right which every citizen possesses, but is a right which is derived from, and limited by, a lawful grant made by the proper authorities.

The right to construct and operate a street railroad upon and along the streets of a municipality is not a constitutional right of every citizen,⁴⁸ that is, it is not the natural right which every citizen possesses, but is a right which is derived from, and limited by, a lawful grant made by the proper authorities.⁴⁹ It is a franchise which must be derived from legislative authority,⁵⁰ and which, in the absence of constitutional restrictions, may be conferred directly by the legislature, or by a municipality pursuant to authority delegated by the legislature, as discussed in Municipal Corporations § 1726 b. It has been held, however, that, where this right is acquired by permit, license, or contract with the municipality, it is a mere license;⁵¹ and it has also been said to be not a franchise but a "secondary franchise," that is, an instrumentality by which the corporate powers granted by the legislature may be exercised.⁵² So, where the legislature grants a franchise to construct and operate a railroad, subject to the consent of the local authorities to the use of the streets of a city, the consent of the city is from sale of its assets, although in purchase of such assets metropolitan utility district assumes all liabilities of company.—In re Opinions of the Justices, supra.

Not a matter of trade or contract

Street railroads are allowed to be established and are required to depart, not as a matter of trade or contract but as a result of some particular determination, on consideration by an authorized board as to the public necessity and convenience of the service at the particular time and place; the procedure being quasi-judicial and not merely a matter of public business administration.—Boston, W. & N. but a step in the grant of a single indivisible franchise to construct and operate a street railroad, and is not the grant of an independent franchise.⁵³

§ 20. Who may Acquire and Exercise Right

The right to construct and operate street railroads may be acquired and exercised by corporations formed for that purpose or, where it is not otherwise provided by law, by natural persons, acting individually, or as a partnership, or joint-stock association.

Corporations formed for the purpose of constructing and operating street railroads may exercise that right upon the streets of a municipality when duly authorized by the state, either directly or through the agency of a municipality,⁵⁴ and, although this right to construct, maintain, and operate a street railroad is generally conferred on such a corporation,⁵⁵ it may also be conferred on, and exercised by, natural persons, acting individually,⁵⁶ or as a partnership,⁵⁷ or joint-stock association,⁵⁸ except where the statutes authorizing the granting of such a right are applicable to corporations only.⁵⁹ It has been held that a grant which is void because granted to individuals cannot be validated by an assignment thereof;⁶⁰ but it has also been held that, notwithstanding, by statute, an individual cannot be authorized to construct and operate a street railroad, he may nevertheless acquire the right by purchase, and may either organize a corporation to construct and operate it or may transfer it unimpaired to a corporation which is capable of exercising the franchise.⁶¹ A street railroad franchise cannot be granted to an ordinary commercial railroad⁶² or to a corporation not authorized to engage in a street railroad enterprise.⁶³

IV. DETERMINATION AS TO NECESSITY AND LOCATION

§ 21. In General

Under some statutes, a certificate or finding by designated public authorities that public convenience and necessity require the construction of a proposed street railroad is a prerequisite to the right to construct and operate it.

Under some statutory provisions relating to the construction and operation of street railroads, the purpose of which is to restrain the construction of useless street railroads,⁶⁴ a certificate or finding by designated public authorities that public convenience and necessity require the construction of a proposed street railroad is a prerequisite to the right to construct and operate it.⁶⁵ Statutes of this nature have been held not to apply to authorized routes of existing corporations operating roads at the time of their passage,⁶⁶ or to a corporation purchasing the property of an existing street railroad company at a mortgage foreclosure sale thereof.⁶⁷

ways, which will parallel another existing street or steam railroad confers on a company which will be affected by the construction of the proposed road the right to be protected against it unless and until the required certificate has been found or obtained,⁶⁸ and such a certificate or finding is necessary where a part of the proposed line is within the public highways, although but a small part of the parallel line is so located.⁶⁹

§ 22. Authority and Permission of Municipality

Under some statutes, the power of approving the route or location of a street railroad is vested in the municipal authorities, and they may, in making their decision, consider all matters bearing on the suitability of the proposed route or location. Where the power of determining such questions is vested in the municipal council, the propriety of, and public necessity for, additional lines or extensions are for the council to decide as a legislative matter.

Under some statutes, the power of approving the route or location of a street railroad is vested in the municipal authorities.⁷⁰ In making their decision the municipal authorities may consider all matters bearing on the suitability of the proposed route or location,⁷¹ but must consider the route or location as a whole and not with respect to particular streets, one by one;⁷² and all the statutory requirements as to formal requisites of their decision must be complied with.⁷³ Where, however, the plan of the proposed route of a subway with location of stations is to be filed with the railroad commissioners, subject to the approval of municipal authority, with a right of appeal therefrom to the commissioner, the number of stations on the subway to be established is a question to be determined by the commissioners,⁷⁴ and the location of the stations after determination by the board as to their number is subject to the approval or disapproval of the municipal authorities,⁷⁵ and, in case they refuse to approve, their decision is subject to review by the board of commissioners.⁷⁶

Power of municipality to require or authorize extension. A certificate of public convenience and necessity or assent of the commission as required by statute, discussed infra § 24, is also a condition precedent to the right of a municipality to compel the construction of a proposed extension.⁷⁷ Where, however, the power of determining such questions is vested in the municipal council, the propriety of, and public necessity for, the additional lines or extension are for the council to decide as a legislative matter,⁷⁸ and, in the absence of some provision for a judicial review, the determination of the council as to the extension is ordinarily final, and cannot be interfered with by the courts,⁷⁹ unless, because of the extension in fact not being required by public convenience and necessity, the action of the council in determining on and directing the extension is arbitrary and unreasonable.⁸⁰

Such an ordinance is presumed to be valid with respect to public necessity and reasonableness,⁸¹ but is not conclusive, and the street railroad company is entitled to a hearing thereon in judicial proceedings,⁸² in which proceedings the burden is on it of proving the unreasonableness and invalidity of the ordinance.⁸³ Although a franchise ordinance reserves to the common council the right at any time to order the company to construct new lines, it can order the construction of a new line only where public convenience and necessity will be promoted thereby.⁸⁴

§ 23. Petition and Consent of Property Owners

Commissioners prescribing the method and manner of construction of a street railroad should, if possible, avoid injury to the owner of the fee of the highway or the adjoining owner, and such owners are entitled as of right to an opportunity to establish before the commissioners, and the court on appeal, that a proposed location or method of construction will cause them special damage.

As discussed infra § 54, while the legislature may usually authorize the construction and operation of a street railroad without the consent of the abutting owners, such consent may be required under the provisions of some constitutions or statutes. Where the matter of determining the location of a street railroad is intrusted to a board of commissioners, it is the duty of the commissioners in prescribing the method and manner of construction to protect the rights of the general public, as far as consistent with the execution of the railroad company's franchise, by ways reasonably practicable, and at the same time to do no greater injury to the owner of the fee of the highway, or the adjoining owner, than follows from the necessary exercise of the company's franchise;⁸⁵ and every owner of the fee in a highway over which a street railway proposes to locate and every adjoining owner is entitled as of right to an opportunity to establish before the commissioners, and the court on appeal, that a proposed location or method of construction will cause him special damage.⁸⁶ However, where such owners appear and file their petition of protest to the approval of the plan of location and have a hearing thereon before the commissioners, they cannot object thereafter that there was a failure to give them notice of such proceedings.⁸⁷

§ 24. Appointment, Powers, and Proceedings of Commissioners

- a. In general
- b. As to extension of lines

a. In General

Under some statutes, a certificate by a designated board of commissioners that public convenience and necessity require the construction of a street railroad is a prerequisite to the right to construct and operate it. The determination of the commission with respect to a change of location may be final.

Under some statutes, a certificate by a designated board of commissioners that public convenience and necessity require the construction of a street railroad is a prerequisite to the right to construct and operate it.⁸⁸ Where the commissioners find that a street railroad properly constructed and operated over the route described in the franchise contract will, under proper conditions, be of great benefit to the community, the commission is without authority to refuse its permission for, and approval of, the construction of the railroad and the exercise of the franchise, because of limitations imposed by the municipal authorities on the franchise contract;⁸⁹ nor can the mere possibility of future contingencies which may arise in a period of years properly be considered as reasons for declining to sanction the construction of the street railroad line, and for withholding a certificate of public convenience and necessity.⁹⁰

Under some statutes, it is required that there be a public hearing on a petition for a permit to operate certain lines, and such requirement contemplates a quasi-judicial proceeding in which a majority of the commissioners must participate in the decision after considering and weighing the evidence.⁹¹ However, such evidence is properly received and the matter heard in the first instance by an employee of the public utilities department designated by the chairman with the concurrence of the commissioners.⁹² Where the statute provides that all decisions of a commissioner shall be the decisions of the commission when approved and confirmed by it, the determination of a commissioner, adopted by the commission, that the public interest requires the construction and operation of a street railroad on the route over which a particular corporation has acquired its franchise, as far as it deals with matters of fact, becomes the determination of the commission.⁹³

Location in general. A public commission may be vested with power to fix and determine the location of a street railroad,⁹⁴ and in the absence of a statute to the contrary, the fact that a location, approved by commissioners, is merely a temporary location does not render it invalid.⁹⁵

Change of location. Under a statute permitting the location of a street railroad to be changed under the direction of the public utilities commission, the determination of the commission with respect to the change is final,⁹⁶ and the fact that the clerk of the commission fails to give the required notice of the determination to all parties of record does not deprive the street railroad company of its right to construct and operate its road;⁹⁷ but, where the statute requires the consent of the local authorities to the construction and operation of a street railroad, as discussed infra § 40, a public commission cannot order the company to remove its line of railroad from one street where it has a franchise to another street in such city where it does not have a franchise.⁹⁸

Location on private land. Under a statute which gives a street railroad company which cannot procure the right to use private land outside a highway, by agreement with the owners, the right to take, by condemnation, such land as may be necessary for the proper operation of the road within the limits of the route previously laid out, subject to the approval of the layout and location of its line by designated commissioners, a street railroad company is not entitled to have a petition for the approval of its right of way by the commissioners entertained and approved until the company has secured by agreement, or by condemnation, the right to locate its line over private property,⁹⁹ and until a plan of location has been adopted by the company.¹ Although an application for such approval should allege these facts,² the proceeding is an informal one before the administrative tribunal,³ and the commissioners may act without such allegations if there is proof before it of such facts.⁴ Approval of the taking of a certain amount of land is not an approval of the location and taking of a smaller amount.⁵

It is sometimes required that a public commission or board grant a certificate of public convenience and necessity before an extension of the line of a street railroad may be constructed.

Under some provisions of law, a certificate of public convenience and necessity, by a public utility commission or board, is required as a prerequisite to the construction of an extension of the line of a street railroad.⁶ The requirement, however, does not apply to a company which was incorporated and had begun proceedings for an extension, under a prior statute, before the enactment of the later statute;⁷ and, unless the statute includes prior corporations, the requirement of such a certificate does not of individuals; fact that considerable number of individuals might find it slightly more convenient to walk one or two blocks less to existing streetcar lines did not establish case of public convenience and necessity which would require commerce commission to order extension of streetcar line or installation of bus service.—O'Keefe v. Chicago Rys. Co., 188 N.E. 815, 354 Ill. 645.

"Convenience" and "necessity" required to support order of commerce commission in respect of extension of streetcar line are those of public,

Findings

Where Public Service Commission found that extensions of two lines of street railway company were required by public convenience and necessity and that operation of proposed extensions would not impair company's earnings so as to prevent an adequate rate of return, finding would not be disturbed unless court determined that it was unsupported by substantial evidence.—*Milwaukee Elec. not apply to a previously and specially chartered corporation in respect of an extension of its road, as authorized by its act of incorporation.⁸ An extension of the railroad within the meaning of such a requirement does not include the construction of a transmission line, outside the right of way, for high-tension current.⁹

Under its power to authorize an extension, it has been held that the commission may authorize the construction of an additional track not connected with existing tracks, except by the tracks of another railroad company;¹⁰ but statutory power to order the construction of additional tracks and such changes, etc., as may promote the security and convenience of the public or secure adequate service, etc., does not authorize the commission to compel a street railroad company to extend its line into new territory, in the absence of authority in its charter therefor,¹¹ or where the extension, in the best judgment of the directors of the company, will result in loss.¹² The power of a municipality to require or authorize an extension of lines and the necessity of assent by the commission as a condition precedent to the right of a municipality to compel the construction of a proposed extension are discussed supra § 22.

New line. A statute which requires such certificate or approval by a commission where the extension constitutes a new and independent line applies only where there is an attempt to construct a road under the guise of an extension.¹³

§ 25. Authority and Determination by Court

A finding by a court that public convenience and necessity require the construction of a proposed street railroad is, under some statutes, a prerequisite to the right to construct and operate it.

Under some statutes, a finding by a designated court that public convenience and necessity require the construction of a proposed street railroad is a prerequisite to the right to construct and operate it.¹⁴

§ 26. Review of Determination

- a. In general
- b. As to location

a. In General

Under some statutes an appeal may be taken to a designated court, from a decision of the commissioners or finding of a lower court, as to whether public convenience requires the construction or extension of a street railroad; but ordinarily the court may review the proceedings only as to rulings of law and not as to findings and decisions on questions of fact, except to determine whether there was sufficient evidence to support the decision or finding.

Under some statutes an appeal may be taken to a designated court, from a decision of the commissioners or finding of a lower court, as to whether public convenience requires the construction of a street railroad,¹⁵ and it has been held that an appeal may be taken by the commission from an order of the court reviewing its order.¹⁶ On such appeal the reviewing court may, by rule or otherwise, specify the time of hearing and notice to be given to the interested persons,¹⁷ and may review the proceedings of the board of commissioners or lower court only as to rulings of law and not as to findings and decisions on questions of fact,¹⁸ except to determine whether there was sufficient evidence to support the decision or finding.¹⁹ No evidence can be heard by the reviewing court except proof of the evidence that was before the board or court when the rulings complained of were made,²⁰ and, although the statute does not provide that a copy of the evidence shall be certified to the court, such certification must be deemed implied.²¹ On appeal from a decision refusing a certificate of necessity the company should allege enough to show that the court has jurisdiction, and that the company had the right to apply for an approval of its route,²² and the court, on a review of the testimony taken before the commissioners, and of the maps and papers on file, together with the findings, may order the granting of such certificate.²³

As to extension. On an application to a public commission for approval of a proposed extension of lines, whether there is a necessity for extended service is a question of fact for determination by the commission, and where the evidence supports the finding of necessity, there is no basis for judicial interference on appeal.²⁴ Where power to review a determination of municipal authorities as to an extension of a street railroad line is vested in a public commission, it may determine whether the requirement of such extension is just and reasonable,²⁵ and its decision will not be disturbed on appeal to the proper court, unless shown by the record to be erroneous.²⁶

b. As to Location

A person whose property rights are injuriously affected by unauthorized or irregular action may appeal from an order or decision of commissioners or a tribunal as to the route or location of a street railroad; and on such appeal questions submitted to the commissioners as an administrative tribunal cannot be tried de novo, but there may be a trial or review of judicial questions.

Under a statutory provision authorizing a person aggrieved to appeal from an order or decision as to the route or location of a street railroad, a person is aggrieved when his property rights are injuriously affected by the unauthorized or irregular action of the commissioners or tribunal,²⁷ and if such fact appears on the face of the proceedings, he may appeal to have the order set aside,²⁸ and on appeal he assumes the position of plaintiff in equity, with the burden of proving that the commissioners or tribunal acted without authority or irregularly.²⁹

On appeal from a determination as to location, questions submitted to the commissioners as an administrative tribunal cannot be tried de novo,³⁰ but there may be such a trial or review of judicial questions,³¹ and, therefore, unless a specification of reasons is required by statute,³² if the objector alleges the fact that he was aggrieved, he need not state the grounds therefor,³³ and any illegality in the commissioners' order cannot be controlled or limited by the reasons of appeal.³⁴ Where the statute makes an appeal a supersedeas of the order appealed from until final action of the court thereon, an order approving the location on, and the taking of, land for a street railway, becomes of no binding force on appeal therefrom.³⁵ Where the appeal is taken by the railroad company, if objectors appear and are heard, it is immaterial that they were not given notice of the appeal.³⁶

On an application to a public commission for approval of a proposed extension of lines, whether the proposed route is a practicable one is a question of fact for determination by the commission, and where the evidence supports the finding of practicability, there is no basis for judicial interference on appeal.³⁷

the court, for want of jurisdiction, admits well pleaded facts and contests the right of appeal on any and every ground,³⁸ and will not be granted unless such want of jurisdiction appears plainly on the face of the record.³⁹ It is not essential to an appeal from an order granting such a motion that a formal judgment be filed and placed on record.⁴⁰

From decision of municipal officers. Where the power to locate the route of a street railroad through a township is conferred by statute on the supervisor and highway commissioner, it has been held that courts have no power to review their action.⁴¹ Under statutes authorizing an appeal to public commissioners from an order of municipal officers as to route or location, an appeal of this nature may be made from an order locating the tracks of a street railroad whose general route has been established by judicial decree;⁴² and, on such appeal, the municipal authorities who have entertained the petition for a location cannot raise the question that the petition was not authorized by the directors of the company, and that there was no party plaintiff before them.⁴³ A further provision of the statute that the decree of the commissioners on such appeal shall be final on all questions of fact includes the determination whether the interests of the public require certain conditions and limitations imposed by the municipal authorities.⁴⁴ Such a decree is not invalid for want of notice of appeal to the municipality, if the mayor and aldermen were duly notified of the petition of appeal and hearing thereon, according to the orders of the commissioners;⁴⁵ nor can these officers raise the further objection that abutting landowners were not made parties to the proceeding and given notice thereof.⁴⁶

Where the statute authorizes an appeal from any decision or order of the municipal authorities, and provides that the petition of appeal shall state specifically the portions of the decision appealed from, the power of the commissioners to review the whole order is not taken away by the fact that only certain portions of the order as specified by appellant are objectionable,⁴⁷ and the commissioners may affirm, disaffirm, or modify the order appealed from as they deem equitable.⁴⁸ If the board of commissioners fails to exercise the power of review given it by statute, the court, on appeal from the decision of the board, is not required to make a decision of its own,⁴⁹ but may annul the decision of the board and direct it to proceed further,⁵⁰ and may direct the commissioners to exercise their equitable powers in disposing of the appeal to them from the decision of the municipal authorities.⁵¹

V. FRANCHISES OR PRIVILEGES IN STREETS, ROADS, OR BRIDGES

A. GRANTS OF FRANCHISES OR PRIVILEGES

1. IN GENERAL

§ 27. Necessity

In order that a street railroad company may carry out the purpose of its existence by constructing and operating its road on and along the streets of a municipality, it must have a further exercise of sovereign power in its behalf, by a grant of such right from the municipality, under authority from the legislature, or by a grant directly by the state legislature.

The charter or articles of incorporation of a street railroad company give it but the bare power to exist,⁵² and in order that it may carry out the purpose of its existence by constructing and operating its road on and along the streets of a municipality, it must have a further exercise of sovereign power in its behalf, by a grant of such right from the municipality, under authority from the legislature, or by a grant directly by the state legislature.⁵³ Whatever consents are required by statute must be obtained before the company acquires any right to build, as discussed infra §§ 40, 54, and the unauthorized occupation of a street or highway by a street railroad company is a nuisance per se, as considered infra § 28. Where authority to use streets and roads is derived directly from the legislature, a street railroad company is not entitled to occupy a street or public road even temporarily, unless such right is clearly conferred by its charter;⁵⁴ but, when the company is acting within express charter authority, it is not subject to interference by a municipality.⁵⁵

Interurban service. The operation on a street railroad of cars reasonably suited for street car service, which render reasonable or prescribed street car service, do not subject the adjacent property within the city limits to an additional servitude, by the fact that they start from, or are destined for, points outside the city limits, and, hence, their operation does not require any franchise additional to the urban streetcar franchise,⁵⁶ and an injunction will not lie to restrain the company, having no franchise for interurban service, from carrying passengers out of or into the city on cars rendering the usual street railway service while passing along the city streets.⁵⁷

§ 28. — Effect of Unauthorized Entry on, or Occupation of, Streets, Roads, or Bridges

The unauthorized entry on, or occupation of, a street or highway by a street railroad company constitutes a nuisance or a continuing trespass which may be restrained by injunction at the suit of public authorities or persons sustaining injury; and local authorities have the right to compel a street railroad to remove its property from streets occupied without authority.

The unauthorized entry on, or occupation of, a street or highway by a street railroad company constitutes a nuisance⁵⁸ which may be enjoined at the suit of the state,⁵⁹ of the local authorities from whom consent or a franchise is necessary,⁶⁰ or by any person sustaining peculiar injury not common to the general public.⁶¹ Such use has also been regarded as a continuing trespass⁶² which cannot ripen into a right as against a city in its governmental capacity or as against the public,⁶³ and may be restrained by injunction.⁶⁴ The local authorities have the right to compel a street railroad to remove its property from streets occupied without authority,⁶⁵ and this

In action by city to enjoin operation of trolley line over streets, the absence of evidence that defendant company had previously been lessee of trolley line of company which held franchise but which surrendered its capital stock to defendant did not warrant finding that defendant was operating without a franchise, where certificate of the surrender admitted in evidence stated that it was given pursuant to statute which did not authorize transfer to railroad which right cannot be lost by laches⁶⁶ or by estoppel.⁶⁷

Local authorities cannot, however, abate a street railroad as a nuisance except by due process of law;⁶⁸ and threats of tearing up the tracks by the municipality gives the company a right of action against the municipality by injunction.⁶⁹ Where a highway is occupied without the required consent, the local authorities may sue for damage to the highway,⁷⁰ but it has been held that such authorities may not recover for the use and occupation of the highway,⁷¹ or for damages for trespass,⁷² where no effort was made to prevent the illegal act. A street railroad company operating without authority has the right at once to cease its service and take up its tracks,⁷³ and, although it is without legal right to operate its road, it nevertheless has a property right in the rails, ties, poles, and wires which it has placed in the street which even the legislature cannot take away.⁷⁴

Questioning right of another company to occupy street. A company which has not obtained the requisite consent has no standing to question the right of another company, subsequently incorporated, to occupy streets, covered by the prior charter of the complaining company,⁷⁵ and this is true whether the second company has received⁷⁶ or has not received⁷⁷ the consent of the authorities.

Bridges. Where a company has failed to obtain the consents made necessary by statute, a railroad company may enjoin the construction of tracks over its bridge for the purposes of the electric railway, although the municipality in which the bridge is situated has given its consent, and although the street railway company has offered to reconstruct and strengthen the bridge so that it will be safe for the use of electric cars.⁷⁸

§ 29. Power to Grant

- a. In general
- b. Exclusive rights

a. In General

Although a franchise to occupy streets may be granted by a municipality in pursuance of delegated authority, it is in fact granted by the state through the agency of the municipality, and the legislature may enlarge the rights conferred by franchise of the municipality.

Since, has been discussed in Municipal Corporations § 1726 b, in the absence of constitutional provisions to the contrary, a franchise to use the streets of a municipal corporation can be granted only by the legislature or its duly authorized agent, strictly speaking, the municipality has no inherent power to grant such a franchise or privilege, although such power may be delegated to it by the state. Accordingly, although the franchise to occupy streets is granted by a municipality in pursuance of delegated authority, it is in fact granted by the state through the agency of the municipality.⁷⁹ The legislature, therefore, can enlarge the rights conferred by a franchise granted by a municipality,⁸⁰ either directly or through some other body.⁸¹ Where the streets on which the road may be constructed are designated by legislative grant, municipal consent to construct roads on streets not designated will not authorize construction of roads thereon,⁸² since such consent cannot supply the want of power.⁸³ Under some statutes, a public commission is vested with exclusive authority to grant permits for the operation of certain street railroads,⁸⁴ and such provisions will be regarded as repealing other statutes giving municipal officers authority to grant permits with the approval of the public commission.⁸⁵ Legislative power conferred on a municipality to authorize street railroads to be laid down in streets does not prohibit it, where there is one track in the street, from granting the right to construct another in the same street.⁸⁶

Exhaustion of power. Since the railroad company derives its right to be a railroad company and to occupy the streets with its tracks from the legislature and not from the municipality, where the only authority granted to local authorities is to grant a location for the tracks over the route designated in the certificate of incorporation or to refuse to make the grant, the municipality having once made the grant has exhausted its power and may not take further action⁸⁷ or interfere with the legislative grant or any rights that are conferred by legislative authority.⁸⁸

Private purpose. In the absence of statutory authority therefor, a street railroad franchise is void when granted for private and not public purposes,⁸⁹ at least where public considerations do not enter into the grant.⁹⁰

Charter restrictions. A street railroad franchise is invalid where, when granted by a municipality, it conflicts with a provision of the city charter,⁹¹ unless such charter provision itself is void.⁹²

Carriage of freight. Under a power to grant franchises for street railroads, a municipal corporation, unless forbidden by statute, may grant a franchise for a street railroad intended to carry freight

as well as passengers.⁹³

Park commissioners. Under a statute authorizing a board of park commissioners to license such passenger railways as it thinks will comport with the use and enjoyment of the park by the public, it has, where the legislature has committed to it the entire exclusive control and maintenance of the park, the right to license railroads therein without interference by the municipal authorities,⁹⁴ and this power is not limited by a constitutional provision requiring the consent of local authorities to the construction of any street passenger railway within the limits of any city, borough, or township.⁹⁵

Who may question power. The question whether a street railway may, under a franchise to use city streets, carry freight, express, and mail in connection with its passenger service may be raised only by a citizen or resident or property owner of the city.⁹⁶

While a municipality may in some circumstances have power to grant exclusive rights and privileges in streets for street railroads for a reasonable length of time, it cannot, except where authorized by the legislature either expressly or by necessary implication, grant a street railroad company an exclusive franchise to the use of its streets.

Since, when not restrained by constitutional provisions, and when the public interest makes it desirable, the state, acting through the legislature or municipal council, may grant an exclusive street railroad franchise, as discussed in Constitutional Law § 464, it has been held that statutory power in a city council to authorize or prohibit the location and laying down of tracks for street railways authorizes it to grant exclusive rights and privileges in streets for a reasonable length of time,⁹⁷ and

The city council has power to de-that a street railroad company may obtain from the state, with the consent of the city, a right to such an exclusive use of a street as necessarily excludes or limits the power of the municipality thereafter to interfere.⁹⁸ However, in accordance with the general rule as to granting exclusive privileges or franchises by a municipality, discussed in Municipal Corporations § 1724, a municipality, except where authorized by the legislature either expressly or by necessary implication, cannot grant a street railroad company an exclusive franchise to the use of its streets,⁹⁹ and, where a municipality has no power to grant such an exclusive franchise, an agreement based on, and in consideration of, such a franchise is also void.¹

§ 30. Grant by Private or Local Statute

Under a constitutional provision which prohibits a private or local bill granting the right to lay railroad tracks, or any new exclusive privilege or franchise, the legislature has no power to pass a private or local bill granting to any corporation the right to construct or operate a street railroad, except on the conditions mentioned in the constitution.

Under a constitutional provision which prohibits a private or local bill granting the right to lay railroad tracks, or any new exclusive privilege or franchise, the legislature has no power to pass a private or local bill granting to any corporation the right to construct or operate a street railroad, except on the conditions mentioned in the constitution,² and such a statute cannot be passed to give an existing street railroad company any new right to lay railroad tracks or any new franchise or privilege.³ Such provision, however, is not violated by a private or local statute to regulate and control a right previously existing in a corporation to lay down tracks or to give new privileges or franchises provided they are not exclusive;⁴ nor is it violated by a general statute providing for the construction of an elevated and underground railroad.⁵

§ 31. Rights Which May Be Conferred in General

A municipality in granting a street railroad company a franchise to use its streets cannot give to the grantee rights which are greater than those permitted by the law then in existence, or which are contrary to general legislative acts.

A municipality in granting a street railroad company a franchise to use its streets cannot give to the grantee rights which are greater than those permitted by the law then in existence,⁶ or which are contrary to general legislative acts;⁷ and, while the grant of such a franchise is subject to the rights of the public, as discussed infra § 72, it must be reasonable with respect to future public rights,⁸ and, if the use of the street by the company must necessarily result in denying the public the right to use it as a public thoroughfare, the grant is invalid and inoperative.⁹

Statute held not invalid

Fact that statute creating Chicago transit authority and giving authority right, but not to exclusion of public rights, to use streets or roads in metropolitan area for interurban transportation of passengers, might prevent operation of other transportation systems in the area and thus create a monopoly, would not render statute unconstitutional as granting special privileges or as constituting a local or special law granting right to lay down railroad tracks.—*People v. and termini of the proposed road, the municipality has no power to grant, and the company no authority to accept, rights in streets other than those named in the charter of the company.¹⁰ A grant to use designated streets, proceedings to open which are then pending, is not invalid because the streets are not then open.¹¹

§ 32. Conditions or Reservations

- a. In general
- b. Limitations of power to impose
- c. Acceptance and estoppel
- d. Performance and enforcement

a. In General

Where the municipal authorities are given the power to grant or to withhold their consent to the construction of street railroads in the city streets, they may ordinarily impose such conditions on which their consent will be given as they see fit, and the company must accept the franchise or consent on the conditions so imposed or not at all.

Where the municipal authorities are given the power to grant or to withhold their consent to the construction of street railroads in the city streets, they may, subject to limitations considered infra subdivision b of this section, impose such conditions on which their consent will be given as they see fit,¹² more particularly where they are authorized to give their consent on such terms and conditions as they may deem for the best interests of the public,¹³ or are otherwise expressly authorized to impose terms and conditions.¹⁴ The company must accept the franchise or consent on the conditions so imposed or not at all.¹⁵ As long as the discretion vested in the municipality as to such reservations and conditions is fairly and honestly exercised, it is not the province of the courts to interfere.¹⁶ Where the city in granting a street railway franchise expressly reserved the power to license for police power regulation, the exercise of such power by the city is not inconsistent with the preservation of the franchise privileges of the street railway.¹⁷

Necessity of incorporation in franchise ordinance. Conditions imposed by statute need not be embodied in the franchise ordinance in order to be binding on the company.¹⁸

b. Limitations of Power to Impose

The power of a municipal corporation to prescribe terms and conditions on which a street railroad shall be constructed and operated is not unlimited, and it cannot impose terms and conditions against public policy, or which are forbidden by, or conflict with, statutory enactments, or which are inconsistent with the rights granted to the company by the legislature or inconsistent with restrictions already placed on the company by the legislature.

Although express power is given to municipal corporations to prescribe terms and conditions on which a street railroad shall be constructed and operated, the power of the municipal corporation is not unlimited.¹⁹ It cannot impose terms and conditions against public policy,²⁰ or which are forbid-

Stipulations precedent to grant

In a statute, providing that "if it be necessary, in the location of any part of a railroad, to occupy any public road, street, alley, way, or ground of any kind, or any part thereof, the municipal or other corporation, or public officers or authorities, owning or having charge thereof, and the company, may agree upon the manner, terms, and conditions upon which the same may be used or occupied," the word "conditions" was construed as meaning stipulations precedent to the enjoyment of the grant.—Cleveland, etc., R. Co. v. Cincinnati, Ohio Prob. 269, 271.

den by,²¹ or conflict with,²² statutory enactments; nor can it impose conditions which are inconsistent with the rights granted to the company by the legislature²³ or inconsistent with restrictions already placed on the company by the legislature.²⁴ Further, the condition or restriction imposed must be one within the scope of the legislative power of the municipality.²⁵ For example, it cannot impose a restriction which would operate extraterritorially.²⁶ So, where the power of the municipality to grant the right to operate a railroad is conferred by the legislature, it can grant such right only in the manner and on the conditions prescribed by the statute conferring the power.²⁷

A constitutional provision prohibiting the legislature from passing any law granting the right to construct and operate a street railroad within any city without first acquiring the consent of such city does not, through the implied right of the city to impose conditions on its consent, confer on the city authority, by means of conditions imposed, to draw under its dominion subject matter not otherwise within its jurisdiction.²⁸ So it cannot, by means of conditions, limit, control, or interfere with the police power,²⁹ or limit the taxing power of the legislature,³⁰ or require the performance of a forbidden act.³¹

Conditions subsequent. A distinction is drawn between conditions precedent and conditions subsequent, in decisions which hold that, where the consent is granted on conditions subsequent, such conditions must be reasonable and within the power of the company to perform.³² In such case the presumption is in favor of the validity of the subsequent condition imposed, on the assumption that the municipal authorities have acted properly and in good faith.³³ However, it is a matter over which the courts have jurisdiction, and any municipal action relating thereto which is arbitrary, oppressive, or confiscatory will be declared void.³⁴

c. Acceptance and Estoppel

A street railroad company has power to agree to such terms imposed by the municipality as a condition to use of its streets as are not in violation of law or public policy, and by accepting the grant the company estops itself to question the reasonableness of the conditions imposed.

The power of the city to prescribe terms on which street railway companies may lay tracks in the streets and operate them necessarily implies the power of the company to agree to such terms not in violation of law or public policy.³⁵ The company by accepting the grant estops itself from questioning the reasonableness of the conditions imposed,³⁶ or from attacking the condition imposed as ultra vires while asserting the validity of the franchise.³⁷ The doctrine of estoppel cannot be made, however, to cover a contract which is entirely beyond the range of the municipal authority,³⁸ as where it is attempted to impose on a grant a condition which operates beyond the limits of the municipality.³⁹

d. Performance and Enforcement

The street railroad company, by accepting the franchise and the privileges conferred thereby, obligates itself to perform the conditions imposed, and such conditions form part of the contract and will be enforced by the courts.

The street railroad company, by accepting the franchise and the privileges conferred thereby, obligates itself to perform the conditions imposed,⁴⁰ notwithstanding they do not inure to the benefit of the company,⁴¹ or that they render their business unprofitable,⁴² or may result in a serious financial loss.⁴³ The obligation accepted as a condition of the grant becomes a public duty, of which the company cannot be relieved by the parties' practical construction of the agreement.⁴⁴ If the conditions imposed are in the nature of conditions precedent, they must be complied with in a reasonable time, or else no rights vest under the franchise.⁴⁵

Enforcement. The conditions form part of the contract and will be enforced by the courts.⁴⁶ The city, however, under power to enact ordinances and to enforce them by imposing penalties, cannot enforce a mere contract obligation by the enactment of penal ordinances punishing a breach thereof.⁴⁷ Under some statutes the performance of conditions may be enforced, at the instance of a public service commission, by injunction.⁴⁸

§ 33. — Particular Conditions

- a. In general
- b. Payment of compensation
- c. Rate of fare; giving of transfers
- d. Construction, equipment, and operation

a. In General

Particular conditions which have been held properly imposed under the power of a municipality to fix the terms and conditions of its grant of a street railroad franchise include conditions that the company permit use of its tracks by another company, that the construction of new lines or extensions from time to time may be ordered, and that the company pay the incidental expenses of the ordinance and a reasonable counsel fee.

Numerous particular conditions have been held properly imposed under the power of a municipality to fix the terms and conditions of its grant of a street railroad franchise,⁴⁹ including conditions which are suggested by the changes in the surface of the street directly caused by the new construction;⁵⁰ that the company shall observe and be subject to all ordinances then in force or thereafter passed with respect to passenger railroads;⁵¹ and that the municipality shall have power to pass ordinances for the protection of persons and the creation of liability against the company for violations.⁵² The municipality may require that the company permit use of its tracks by another street railroad company,⁵³ and that elevated roads enter into agreement with companies owning and operating a surface steam railroad on the same street, transferring the operation by steam to the elevated tracks and transforming the surface road into an ordinary street railroad.⁵⁴

Construction of new lines or extensions. It is proper to impose as a condition that the construction of new lines or extensions from time to time may be ordered.⁵⁵

Limitations on duration of franchise. As a condition to the grant of a right to use the streets, a

b. Payment of Compensation

- (1) For use of streets
- (2) For use of bridge
- (1) For Use of Streets
 - (a) In general
 - (b) Compensation based on earnings of company
- (a) In General

A municipality has the power to exact compensation for the use of its streets by street railroad companies as a consideration for such use, and such compensation may be by way of a fixed sum payable at specified times. If the power to readjust rates charged for use of the streets is expressly vested in the authorities granting the franchise, this power must be reasonably exercised.

A municipality has the power to exact compensation for the use of its streets by street railroad companies⁵⁸ as a consideration for such use.⁵⁹ This has been held not an exercise of the taxing or licensing power,⁶⁰ although called a license in the ordinance granting the franchise,⁶¹ since it is not compulsory in character, but is voluntary and individual,⁶² and rests on contract.⁶³ It is rather an equitable method of enabling the municipality to protect itself from a loss which would otherwise ensue from the location of the railway tracks in its streets.⁶⁴ The exaction of compensation has been described as in the nature of a toll or rental for use of streets or highways,⁶⁵ or as amounting to a purchase of the franchise to use them.⁶⁶

Such compensation may be by way of a fixed sum payable annually,⁶⁷ semiannually,⁶⁸ or monthly.⁶⁹ It may take the form of a fixed sum per car operated,⁷⁰ or a designated percentage of the company's earnings, as discussed infra subdivision b (1) (b) of this section, or such compensation may be based on lineal mileage of street railway tracks.⁷¹ Under

A street railway company, voluntarily continuing to pay rent to city in amount of interest on bonds issued thereby to provide funds for construction of railway system, as provided by contract, could not recover from city portion of rent based on cost of spur, blocked for company's purposes by city subway, even though each payment was accompa-

a constitutional provision for a tax on street railways measured by gross receipts, in lieu of all other taxes and licenses, but not releasing railways from payment of an "amount agreed to be paid or required by law to be paid for any special privilege or franchise," the collection of licenses or license taxes on street cars, provided for by part of the franchises held by the street railway, was barred by payment of the "in lieu" tax.⁷²

Readjustment of charges. An ordinance imposing a condition that the street railway pay an annual license fee of a certain amount for each car operated has been construed as not precluding the city from increasing the license fee by a subsequent ordinance.⁷³ If the power to readjust rates charged for the use of streets is expressly vested in the authorities granting the franchise, this power must be reasonably exercised, so as not to be oppressive or confiscatory.⁷⁴ However, their action in increasing rates will not be declared void unless clearly oppressive,⁷⁵ and the courts will not interfere except in the case of manifest abuse of discretion.⁷⁶

(b) Compensation Based on Earnings of Company

A municipality may require a street railroad company to pay a designated per cent of its earnings, net or gross, as a consideration for the use of its streets.

A municipality may require a street railroad company to pay a designated per cent of its earnings, net or gross, as a consideration for the use of its streets,⁷⁷ even though partially derived from operation outside of the municipality.⁷⁸ A company which has agreed to pay a certain percentage of gross earnings is not relieved from a portion thereof, because the length of the road in the municipality was shortened by other municipalities being carved out of the municipality,⁷⁹ or because other sums had been exacted by such other municipalities for the right to lay additional tracks through their territory.⁸⁰ The contract providing for such franchise payments is not unlawfully impaired by a subsequent enactment requiring the railroad to pay a tax on gross income, since the city, in granting a franchise, does not abdicate its power of taxation.⁸¹

Suspension of right to payment. Where a city unlawfully prevents a street railroad company, for a certain period, from using one of the streets over which its franchise authorizes it to operate, this amounts to a partial eviction which suspends the city's right to collect during such period the percentage of the railroad's income stipulated in the franchise,⁸² and tender of payment of such percentage in an effort to induce the city to comply with the franchise contract is not an admission of the city's right to such percentage during the pe-

Where percentage of net profits of traction companies was in accordance with ordinance paid to city for privilege of using streets, such fund was to be kept by city and expended by it for proper public purpose, and patrons who had paid legal fares did not have, by virtue of that fact alone, any enforceable legal right or beneficial interest in contract, the resulting profits, or the public fund created therefrom.—Tilney v. City of Chicago, C.C.A.III., 134 F.2d 682, certiorari denied 64 S.Ct. 66, 320 U.S. 759, 88 L.Ed. 452.

Receipts of advertising company

Under transit corporations' city franchises, prohibiting assignment or transfer of rights granted thereby without city's written consent and transferee's assumption of all franchise obligations especially with respect to payment of compensation to city, such corporations were taxable on entire gross receipts of advertising company, to which they leased advertising space in their streetcars and buses, from advertisements carried therein, not merely on amount received by them from such company, in absence of consent by city to transfer of corporations' rights to such company or agreement by transferee to assume franchise obligations.—*Third Ave. Transit Corp. v. Nature of charge

Whether annual charge exacted of traction company by city on basis of gross receipts was a license tax, within constitutional and statutory prohibitions, or compensation for use of streets, permitted to be exacted under contract, could not be determined from fact that city officials had termed charge as license or franchise tax or from fact that company, without protest, had paid charge for many years.—*Danville Traction & Power Co. v. (2) For Use of Bridge

(a) In general

(b) Expenses made necessary by additional use

(a) In General

A street railroad company operating its cars over a bridge forming part of a street or highway may be required to pay for such use a reasonable compensation by rent or otherwise, whether the bridge is a public bridge or owned by a quasi-public corporation; but after a contractual grant of the right to use a bridge without compensation, the municipality cannot exact such compensation.

The operation by a street railroad company of its cars over a bridge forming part of a street or highway is a special use different in kind and extent from that of the general public,⁸⁶ and, in consequence, it may be required to pay for such use a reasonable compensation by rent or otherwise, whether the bridge is a public bridge or owned by a quasi-public corporation.⁸⁷ The fact that the bridge is free to the general public does not make the charging of compensation for use by a street railroad company an unlawful discrimination.⁸⁸ However, after a contractual grant of the right to use a bridge without compensation, the municipality cannot exact such compensation,⁸⁹ although it has become the owner of all of the stock of the bridge company and opened the bridge free to public use,⁹⁰ and all that it can do in such case is to require a license fee in amount reasonably sufficient to indemnify it for whatever expense for repair, maintenance, and supervision it is called on to bear by reason of the extraordinary use to which the structure is subjected.⁹¹ At the expiration of a contract imposing the obligation to pay compensation for the use of a bridge, the company is not entitled to the free use of the bridge, but is under a common-law liability for use and occupation.⁹²

Where bridge is destroyed, additional compensation cannot be exacted from a street railroad company which proposes to make the same use of the bridge as it did before.⁹³ The right to rent terminates on the lawful demolition of the bridge.⁹⁴

Fixing compensation. The compensation being such as may be agreed on by the parties,⁹⁵ or fixed by the court,⁹⁶ or by a board to whom the legislature has delegated the power to ascertain what is a reasonable compensation,⁹⁷ on disagreement as to compensation for future use of a bridge, a court of equity has jurisdiction to fix the compensation to be paid,⁹⁸ and to enter a decree fixing such compensation for a term of years, with a provision for modification of the decree on application of either party for proper cause shown.⁹⁹ However, a decree granting to the company express permission to proceed with its construction work, without regulations to preserve the rights of the county and the safety of the public, is improvident; the court must keep itself in such position as on final hearing to make such decree on all disputed matters as the proofs will warrant.¹

Regulation of rates. Where the compensation provided for the use and occupation of a bridge owned by a private corporation is the payment of a certain sum for each passenger carried, such a contract is one regulating rates, and, as such, is subject to the jurisdiction of a state public service commission and to the power conferred on it to review rates;² and it is not material that such a contract is made in the form of a lease, when it in effect regulates the rates to be charged by the utility.³

An action at law is a proper remedy to recover an amount due for rent for use of a bridge due under the terms fixed by the decree.⁴ Also, where a company which continues to use a bridge after expiration of a contract imposing the obligation to pay compensation refuses further payment, an action at law will lie to enforce the common-law liability for use and occupation during the latter period;⁵ and in these circumstances it is for the jury to determine on all the evidence what would be a fair and proper rental.⁶

(b) Expenses Made Necessary by Additional Use

As a condition of occupying and using a bridge, a street railroad company may be required to bear the expense of strengthening the bridge so that it may support safely the street railroad and its traffic in addition to the ordinary public travel.

As a condition of occupying and using a bridge, a street railroad company may be required to bear the expense of strengthening the bridge so that it may support safely the street railroad and its traffic in addition to the ordinary public travel;⁷ and this principle applies where the bridge is owned by a quasi-public corporation.⁸ An agreement between a county and a street railroad company inures to the benefit of a city whose territorial limits have been extended so as to include the bridge,⁹ and may be enforced by such city by any means which would have been available to the county had it not been included within such city.¹⁰ A condition of this character only requires the railroad company so to strengthen the bridge as to relieve the local authorities of the additional burden cast on the bridge by the construction and operation of the road over it.¹¹ Where the bridge connects two cities, one half thereof being in each of the cities, a release by one of them of the obligations of the company to it does not release the company from its joint obligation to the two cities to strengthen the bridge.¹²

Remedy of company on repudiation of agreement by local authorities. Where county commissioners have entered into a written agreement with a street railway company to give it the use of a county bridge without making provision for strengthening and repairing the bridge or paying a rental therefor, and have subsequently notified the company that they will not be bound by the agreement, the company will be restrained by injunction from taking forcible possession of the bridge.¹³ In these circumstances, the court may appoint an engineer to examine and report what will be necessary to strengthen the bridge for street railway traffic, and, on the filing of his report, the court may permit the street railway company to enter upon the bridge and strengthen it, and, when this has been done to the satisfaction of the court, the company may use the bridge for the purposes of its business, on giv-

c. Rate of Fare; Giving of Transfers

It is proper to impose as a condition to the grant of a street railroad franchise that the rate of fare shall not exceed a specified amount or that transfer tickets shall be provided at certain intersections or connections.

It is proper to impose as a condition to the grant of a street railroad franchise that the rate of fare shall not exceed a specified amount,¹⁵ that pupils going to or from school shall be carried at a reduced fare,¹⁶ or that each fare collected shall be good for one continuous ride in the same general direction, and that a transfer ticket shall be provided for this purpose, at a point of intersection or connection.¹⁷ A condition with respect to rate of fare may be waived by acts or agreements of the parties,¹⁸ and, where a city has permitted the Public Service Commission to establish a statutory rate of fare, notwithstanding the franchise provision, such rate of fare remains the legal rate and abolishes the franchise rate notwithstanding the authority to establish it is subsequently withdrawn.¹⁹

Municipal authorities, in granting consent to the operation of a railroad in their streets, may properly impose conditions as to its construction, equipment, and operation.

The municipal authorities, in granting consent to the operation of a railroad in their streets, may properly impose conditions as to its construction,²⁰ equipment,²¹ and operation.²² It is proper to impose as a condition that there shall be no abandonment of tracks already laid.²³ Under a reserved power to regulate the running of cars, the municipality cannot require the railroad to establish a new route conflicting with its original grant.²⁴ A reservation of the power to change by resolution the location of tracks and poles on the application of the company is not invalid;²⁵ but power of the city arbitrarily to remove the tracks cannot be created by reservation or otherwise except by legislative authority.²⁶

Construction of grant as to duration see infra § 87.

Limit on duration of franchise imposed as condition to grant see supra § 33 a.

Term held not invalid

Where city granted franchises to corporation for operation of a street railway for public use, the franchises to exist during life of corporation's perpetuity may be made only when the authority to do so is conferred on the city, either expressly or by implication, by the legislature;²⁹ and such a grant is subject to the constitutional limitation that no special privilege may be granted which may not be altered, revoked, or repealed by the legislature.³⁰ A franchise which is revocable at the pleasure of the city, as required by a constitutional provision, but which fixes no definite term for its expiration if not revoked, does not conflict with another constitutional provision which prohibits the granting of a franchise for a longer period than a specified number of years.³¹

§ 35. Acceptance

In order that the grant of a street franchise to a street railroad company may become operative and binding, it must be accepted by, or on behalf of, the company within the time, if any, specified in the grant; and, when the grant is so accepted, it becomes a binding contract between the company and the granting power.

In order that the grant of a street franchise to a street railroad company may become operative and binding, it must be accepted by, or on behalf of, the company³² within the time, if any, specified in the grant;³³ and, when the grant is so accepted, it becomes a binding contract between the company and the granting power.³⁴ If the company accepts and avails itself of the grant, it cannot question the validity thereof;³⁵ nor can the city, after the company has made a large expenditure of money, in pursuance of the grant, repudiate the action of its council on the ground that their proceedings were irregular.³⁶

§ 36. Modification and Amendment of Franchise or Grant

Generally, the public body granting a street railroad franchise may not later modify or amend it, without the company's consent, express or implied, so as to lessen the rights and privileges of the company, or impose additional burdens on it, unless the power to do so is clearly reserved; but an amendment or modification is permissible, if all parties interested consent.

Since a street railroad franchise constitutes a contract, as discussed supra § 35, the body granting it may not later modify or amend it, without the company's consent, express or implied, so as to lessen the rights and privileges of the company, or impose additional burdens on it,³⁷ unless the power to do so is clearly reserved.³⁸ Nevertheless, an amendment or modification is permissible, if all parties interested consent,³⁹ including the municipality in which the rights of the state have become vested,⁴⁰ and the company,⁴¹ and if it is of a character which the municipality has the power to make.⁴² It has charter and for such time as charter might be extended by renewals, and in 1930 the corporation's charter was extended one hundred one years by act of legislature, the franchises did not violate laws or constitution of state with respect to terms of their duration.—*Phenix City v. Within scope of original grant

City ordinance amending contractual grant of right to construct, maintain, and operate a street railway system in city and affecting only

been held that by amendment or modification of a franchise the company may be relieved of a part of the obligations imposed by the franchise, if the new agreement is made in good faith and based on a sufficient consideration;⁴³ and that the power to make a modification or amendment of this character is not affected by a statute forbidding a municipality to "release the grantee from any obligations or liabilities imposed by the terms of the grant."⁴⁴

Citizens of the city may not complain of the modification or amendment of a franchise of a street railroad company as imposing a burden on the railroad company, but only the company may complain of the change.⁴⁵ A statute providing for conversion of every grant by a city of a street railway franchise into an indeterminate permit is a remedial measure and should be liberally construed to effect its purpose of making available to all municipal street railway systems coming under its scope the advantages of both state and local control.⁴⁶ A franchise grant converted under such statute is preserved only to the extent that its terms are not in conflict with specific provisions of the statute as a whole, and, where any conflict appears, the statute governs.⁴⁷

Operation and effect of amendment. Where a city granted a street railway company a franchise, and after it was assigned to defendant amended it by a relocation of part of the line, which relocation was accepted by defendant, all other provisions and conditions in the franchise remain in force.⁴⁸ Also, where a municipality, after granting to a street railroad company a franchise under which the corporation is obligated to carry passengers at a specified fare, grants a franchise for the construction of an extension, on condition that the company carry passengers at a fare lower than that specified in the original franchise, the old franchise is presently and effectively modified or superseded by the new contract, in so far as the municipal authorities are interested in, and can contract for, a reduced fare.⁴⁹

2. GRANT OR CONSENT BY LOCAL AUTHORITIES

§ 37. Privileges in Streets and Highways in General

In the absence of constitutional restriction, the legislature may authorize a street railroad company to construct and operate its road in streets and highways without obtaining the consent of the local authorities having control and supervision thereof; and on the other hand, it may lawfully require such consent.

There is a distinction between the right of a street railroad company to operate a railroad under its articles of incorporation, called a "franchise," and the consent of a municipality to the use of its streets for street railroad purposes, required by constitutional or statutory provisions, which is also generally called a "franchise" or "secondary franchise."⁵⁰ As the legislature possesses the control changes within the scope of provisions made in original grant in recognition of the need for future change is valid.—Minneapolis St. Ry. Co. v. City of Minneapolis, 40 N.W. 2d 353, 229 Minn. 502, appeal dismissed 70 S.Ct. 574, 339 U.S. 907, 94 L.Ed. 1335.

Arbitration

Ordinance adjusting street railway franchise provided for resort to arbitration as fact-finding procedure, and was not void as surrender of legislative authority by city.—Poggel v. Louisville Ry. Co., 10 S.W.2d 305, 225 Ky. 784.

Rates of fare and frequency of service

A grant made in good faith to an interurban company, wherein certain obligations relating to rates and frequency of service imposed in a former franchise are relinquished, is not invalid if the consideration supporting the second grant is substantial and advantageous to the public.—State v. McClure, 140 N.E. 487, 107 Ohio St. 551.

Consideration held sufficient

Making possible continued operation of street railway system constituted valid consideration for modification by city council of railway franchise paving obligations.—Ricketts v. City of Mansfield, 183 N.E. 181, 43 Ohio App. 316, error dismissed 185 N.E. 881, 125 Ohio St. 631.

of streets and highways, it may, in the absence of constitutional restriction, authorize a street railroad company to construct and operate its road in streets and highways without obtaining the consent of the local authorities having control and supervision thereof, such as boards or officers of cities, towns, villages, counties, boroughs, and townships;⁵¹ and on the other hand it may lawfully require such consent,⁵² in which case, the consent of the local authorities must be obtained before any rights in the street are acquired, as discussed infra § 40. An ordinance granting the right to construct, maintain, and operate a street railroad, where within the power of the municipality to enact, and not otherwise in contravention of law, constitutes a valid and subsisting contract between the city and the street railroad.⁵³

§ 38. Use of Bridges in General

Under some constitutional or statutory provisions, the consent of local authorities controlling and responsible for the maintenance of bridges must be obtained before such bridges may be used by street railroad companies, and the terms on which consent may be granted are in the first instance a matter of agreement between the local authorities and the railroad.

Under some constitutional or statutory provisions, the consent of local authorities controlling and responsible for the maintenance of bridges to the use of such bridges by street railroad companies, is required.⁵⁴ Under such provisions it has been held that consent may not arbitrarily be refused,⁵⁵ although the terms on which it may be granted are in the first instance a matter of agreement between the local authorities and the railroad,⁵⁶ and if they cannot agree may be determined by the courts.⁵⁷ On the other hand, it is the duty of the local authorities to see that the bridge is made safe for the new use,⁵⁸ and, in consequence, they may refuse to allow the bridge to be used until it is made strong enough for the additional use.⁵⁹

§ 39. Use of Turnpikes and Toll Roads in General

When required by statute, the consent of the local authorities to the use of a turnpike or toll road by a street railroad company must be obtained.

When required by statute, the consent of the local authorities to the use of a turnpike or toll road by a street railroad company must be obtained,⁶⁰ notwithstanding the turnpike company has given its consent.⁶¹ Prior to obtaining the requisite consents, the right of the company to exercise its franchise is still an inchoate, and not a vested, right.⁶² However, the consent of local authorities is not necessary in the absence of a statute requiring it.⁶³

Indeterminate permit

Under statute providing for conversion of every grant by city of street railway franchise into an indeterminate permit, the consent of city is wholly unnecessary, since city is merely a department or political subdivision of the state to which governmental powers have been intrusted, subject to withdrawal or modification by enactment of general laws.—*Minneapolis St. Ry. of local authorities to the construction and operation of the railroad in streets and highways, such consent must be obtained before any rights in the streets are acquired.

While, in the absence of constitutional restriction, the legislature may authorize a street railroad company to construct and operate its road in streets and highways without obtaining the consent of the local authorities having control and supervision thereof, as discussed supra § 37, in many jurisdictions such consent is expressly required either by statute or by organic law, and, when so required, it must be obtained before any rights in the street are acquired.⁶⁴ It has been held, however, that, even where consent was not obtained in advance, as it should have been, there may be subsequent ratification of a street railroad company's use of the streets.⁶⁵ Further, the consent of local authorities is required only as to such railroads as are within the intent of the statutory or constitutional provisions.⁶⁶ A railroad company, under statutory power, may construct a section of an interurban railway, within city limits, on a private right of way and crossing city streets, without obtaining a franchise from the city,⁶⁷ although the company was organized for the purpose of avoiding a right of way offered by the city as being too circuitous and expensive.⁶⁸

Use of elevated tracks for freight traffic has been held not to constitute an additional burden on the streets so as to require the consent of the city, where no additional obstructions were placed in or over the streets and no limitation existed on the number of cars which the elevated railroad company might run over the tracks in a given time.⁶⁹

Abolition of office of an official whose consent was, by statute, essential to the extension of a railroad over township highways does not authorize such extension without official consent.⁷⁰

Line extending through more than one municipality or governmental unit. Where a street railroad extends through several villages, the consent of the village authorities of one village is sufficient as to the construction of the road in such village, although the consents of local authorities of other villages have not been obtained, where the statute provides that the authorities in villages may consent to the construction of proposed railroads in the streets of villages and that the consent of commissioners of highways shall be obtained with respect to highways in towns,⁷¹ and the view has been taken that the consent of one set of authorities is in no wise dependent on the consent of another set of authorities.⁷² However, under a charter which authorizes the building of a line of street railroad through several townships, and which makes the consent of local authorities a condition precedent to the right to construct the line, it has been held that the company must secure the consent of all of the townships before it can insist on its right to build under its charter,⁷³ and that the consent of one municipality alone will not authorize construction of a street railroad through its streets or highways unless and until the consent of all the municipalities has been obtained.⁷⁴

§ 41. To Whom Grant Made

Consent to construct and operate street railroads cannot be given to individuals where the legislature limits the power of the local authorities to grant licenses to construct and operate such roads to incorporated companies created under the general laws of the state.

authorities to a company named, prior to its incorporation, to construct a road on a certain street, could not become effective after such incorporation, as against another company which incorporated before the former company, and within a reasonable time thereafter obtained consent to construct a road on the same street.⁷⁶ A grant by a municipal council of which the mayor is a member to one acting as agent for the mayor with the object of enabling the grantee to assign his rights and the resulting franchise to a railroad controlled by the mayor is invalid.⁷⁷ A statute providing that no railroad shall be constructed on a particular highway without a special act for that purpose may be amended so as to permit the construction of a road by a company organized under a general act.⁷⁸

§ 42. From Whom Consent Obtained

The boards or officers who have authority to give consent to the construction and operation of street railroads and from whom consent must be obtained as a condition precedent to the right to do so are those designated by local statutes or constitutional provisions.

The boards or officers who have authority to give consent to the construction and operation of street railroads and from whom consent must be obtained as a condition precedent to the right to do so are those designated by local statutes or constitutional provisions.⁷⁹ The "local authorities" whose consent is necessary are, in cities, ordinarily the common council,⁸⁰ and, in towns, the town highway commissioners.⁸¹ Township supervisors may be the proper "local authorities" to give consent to the construction of a street railroad through the township;⁸² and, where the law requires but one supervisor for the township, his consent must be obtained.⁸³ Where the legislature has conferred on the commissioners' courts general superintendence over all highways in their counties, they are the "local authorities" within a constitutional provision as to the obtaining of permission to build a street railway along the public highways of counties.⁸⁴ The authorities of one municipality cannot consent for the authorities of another municipality.⁸⁵

Authorities having exclusive control. Where the statute requires the consent of authorities having exclusive control of the streets, and there is a repugnancy between different acts conferring exclusive control on different sets of officers, the latest act, being the final expression of the legislative intent, must control, and the consent of the officers designated therein is sufficient.⁸⁶ A commissioner of street improvements who has the authority previously vested in the department of public parks does not have exclusive control so that his consent may be required where, while the department of public parks had the exclusive power to locate, lay out, construct, and maintain certain streets and avenues, there were important governmental duties left to be performed by the city of which the city had control.⁸⁷ Where the statute requires the consent of the governing body of the township, the consent of the township committee which is the governing body is required in addition to that of the road board of the township which has general and exclusive control and management of the public highways.⁸⁸

Notwithstanding the consent of the county authorities, the consent of township authorities may be also required under a statute requiring such consent of any board, body, or public authorities other than the governing body of the municipality, town, township, village, or borough which shall have control of any of the streets and highways.⁸⁹ Under a statute authorizing the construction of railroads along the highways of townships under the consent of the township authorities, state and territorial roads within the township, for the condition of which the township is responsible, are included, and a franchise may be granted by the township board and the consent of the highway township commissioner is not required.⁹⁰

The power conferred on local authorities having control of streets and highways to authorize street railroad companies to construct and operate lines of railroad therein necessarily implies the right to refuse to consent thereto.

Since the power conferred on local authorities having control of streets and highways to authorize street railroad companies to construct and operate lines of railroad therein necessarily implies the right to refuse consent thereto,⁹¹ they may withhold consent entirely,⁹² or, within limitations considered supra § 32, grant it on such conditions as they may see fit to impose. However, consent to the use of bridges by street railroad companies cannot arbitrarily be refused, as discussed supra § 38.

§ 44. Proceedings to Obtain in General

There must be a substantial compliance with the terms and conditions prescribed by statute, in order that the consent of local authorities to the use of streets by a street railroad may be valid and effective.

Since in giving consent, the local authorities do not act in the exercise of any natural or inherent power, but under delegated powers, as discussed supra § 29, there must be a substantial compliance with the terms and conditions prescribed by statute, in order that the consent to the use of streets by a street railroad may be valid and effective.⁹³ Before a street railroad franchise may be legally granted, all statutory conditions precedent must be fulfilled.⁹⁴ Thus there must be a compliance with statutory requirements relating to the application for a franchise,⁹⁵ the giving of public notice of the application or of the proposed ordinance, discussed infra § 45, and the submitting of the ordinance granting the franchise to the voters, infra § 47. However, this does not apply to conditions which are in the nature of conditions subsequent,⁹⁶ or are conditions precedent only to the beginning of construction.⁹⁷ A certificate of public convenience and necessity as a condition to beginning construction of a street railroad, discussed supra §§ 21-26, has been held not a prerequisite to the granting of a local franchise,⁹⁸ since such certificate may be obtained after the franchise has been received.⁹⁹

§ 45. — Notice and Hearing

There must be a compliance with the statutory requirements in respect of giving public notice of the application for the franchise, consent, or privilege; and, where a statute requires a notice and hearing, the power of the city authorities to act is dependent on a hearing duly accorded on a proper notice.

There must be a compliance with the statutory requirements in respect of giving public notice of the application for the franchise, consent, or privilege,¹ or serving it on the municipality, where application is made to railroad commissioners;² but, where the statute provides only for notice of application, notice of the proposed ordinance need not be given.³ The requirement of such notice for a franchise for the construction of a new road or route does not apply to an application for an extension of the tracks of a line already existing and constructed under a former franchise duly granted,⁴ unless the extension in fact constitutes an original or new line,⁵ as where it is from a line wholly without the municipality into or through the municipality;⁶ nor does the requirement of such notice apply to an application for the renewal of a franchise previously granted.⁷ So, also, the statutory requirement of public notice of the pendency of a resolution or ordinance for an extension or change of route or routes does not apply to proceedings for the extension of the track of an existing line of railroad.⁸

Where the statute provides that no ordinance for such purpose shall be passed until public notice of the application has been given, notice is sufficient if given before the passage of the final ordinance establishing the route, although it is subsequent to the passage of the first ordinance or resolution.⁹ A publication of notice which is legally insufficient cannot, after the granting of the franchise, be rendered sufficient by a subsequent curative ordinance.¹⁰

Hearing. Where a statute requires a notice and hearing, the power of the city authorities to act is dependent on a hearing duly accorded on a proper notice.¹¹

§ 46. — Mode of Consent; Sufficiency of Ordinance or Resolution

In granting a street railroad franchise by municipal ordinance, statutory requirements relating to the passage and approval of ordinances must be observed, and, in order to become binding and operative as a contract, it must be perfected as such.

erative as a contract, it must be perfected as such.¹³ Where statutes require the giving of municipal consent to be exercised by ordinance approved by the mayor, exercise of the power by a resolution which was not submitted to the mayor is a nullity.¹⁴ If consent is given by a board, it must be given by the members thereof acting as a board at a regularly convened meeting, and not as individuals.¹⁵

Where the consent of a township is given, it has been held that it should be by means of a formal resolution, duly recorded in the minutes of the meeting,¹⁶ although, where such consent is evidenced by a written instrument duly signed and recorded by the township supervisors, their failure to have the minutes thereof entered on their own records will not invalidate the consent.¹⁷ Where the consent of park commissioners to the construction of a street railroad through a park approach is required in addition to the consent of the city council, the validity of such consent is not affected by the fact that it differs in its terms from the consent of the common council, especially where its terms are more rigorous.¹⁸

Details as to location and construction. Under a statute requiring the consent of the municipal authorities to a location of the tracks, the authorities in granting consent cannot leave it to the discretion of the company to determine whether more than one track shall be laid and as to the location on the street and the construction of sidings, crossovers, and switches.¹⁹ So, where the municipal authorities are permitted to authorize the use of poles and wires, a provision that they may prescribe the manner in which, and the places where, such poles shall be located, and the manner in which the wires shall be strung thereon, is mandatory.²⁰ It has, however, been held that it is not essential to the validity of a franchise or right to construct a street railroad that the consent of the municipal authorities specifically designate the exact location latitudinally in the streets on which the road is to be constructed and operated or the number of tracks to be laid, but that, in the absence of a constitutional or statutory provision to the contrary, it may be regulated by the municipal authorities after consent has been given.²¹

Implied consent. Under charters simply authorizing the municipal authorities to disapprove of the construction of the road, within a specified time, consent will be inferred, unless the city manifests its disapproval within the named time in clear and certain terms.²²

§ 47. — Submission to Popular Vote

Where the power of granting street railroad franchises is vested directly and specifically by the legislature in the legislative authority of the city, it is neither necessary nor proper to submit to the voters for their ratification any ordinance granting a franchise to a street railroad company; but, under some statutes, it is necessary to obtain the consent of a majority of the electors of a city to the use of the streets over which a street railroad is to be constructed.

Where the power of granting street railroad franchises is vested directly and specifically by the legislature in the legislative authority of the city, that is, the mayor and city council, it is neither necessary nor proper to submit to the voters for their ratification any ordinance granting a franchise to a street railroad company.²³ In some jurisdictions, however, it is made necessary, by statute, to obtain the consent of a majority of the electors of a city to the use of the streets over which a street railroad is to be constructed, the consent to be given or withheld at an election held for that purpose;²⁴ and the grant of a franchise to a street railroad without such consent is invalid.²⁵ In order to render the consent valid there must be a substantial compliance with the statutes requiring it, as to placing on file the ordinance granting the franchise one week before adoption, and publication of notice thereof,²⁶ as to the time of calling the election,²⁷ giving of notice for the time designated in the statute,²⁸ and designating a specific route or routes on which it is intended to lay the tracks;²⁹ and, when the election is had in conjunction with a general city election, the affirmative of the proposition must receive a majority of all the votes cast at such general election.³⁰ It has been held, however, that, where the electors of a city are invested with the power of extending to a streetcar company the right or privilege of entering on the streets of the city, an irregular exercise of such power will not, under all circumstances, be held void.³¹

§ 48. — Review by Commission or Court

Ordinarily the granting of a franchise cannot be interfered with by a public commission where its functions are merely regulatory; nor will the courts interfere therewith.

The granting of a franchise, being a legislative act, cannot be interfered with by a public commission where its functions are merely regulatory;³² nor will the courts interfere therewith,³³ except to prevent a fraudulent or manifestly abusive or oppressive exercise of the power of municipal authorities in granting such franchises.³⁴ Under a statute authorizing suit by taxpayers, a taxpayer suing to enjoin the granting of consent by local authorities to the building and operation of a street railroad cannot be compelled to admit others as co-complainants, although the entire body of taxpayers, the city itself, and the general public may be interested in the result.³⁵

§ 49. Presumption as to Requisite Consents

When a street railroad has been constructed and operated for a long time, it will be presumed that consents required by law were given.

Generally, when a street railroad has been constructed and operated for a long period of time, it will be presumed that consents required by law were given.³⁶ Under a statute providing that, where a railroad has been constructed and put in operation for a specific length of time, it will be presumed that the requisite consent of local authorities, property owners, and others has been duly obtained, the fact that there is no record of consent in a particular book of records does not overcome such presumption where there is no statutory requirement that the consent be recorded therein.³⁷

§ 50. Operation and Effect

a. In general

b. Matters affecting validity

a. In General

When all the consents required by statute have been obtained, the right of a company, duly incorporated, to build is complete; but consent given to a railroad company having no charter authority to use the streets is ineffectual to confer such power.

When all the consents required by statute have been obtained, the right of a company, duly incorporated, to build is complete.³⁸ However, as municipal consent cannot create or enlarge corporate franchises,³⁹ consent given to a railroad company having no charter authority to use the streets is ineffectual to confer such power;⁴⁰ and, where a street railway company has a trunk franchise and branch franchises, if the trunk has no sufficient legal existence, its branches must also fail, and the municipality's consent to their construction will not avail the company.⁴¹ Consent to individuals does not bind a municipality to accept a corporation in their stead.⁴²

Nature. Consent is in the nature of a license and must be shown and established by the street railroad company, when its authority is questioned.⁴³

b. Matters Affecting Validity

A street railroad franchise may be rendered invalid when its granting is attended with fraud, extortion, or bribery, although not where it is merely disadvantageous to the municipality or is injudicious. The partial invalidity of a franchise ordinance does not necessarily affect the validity of the whole.

A street railroad franchise is invalid when its granting is attended with fraud,⁴⁴ extortion,⁴⁵ or bribery.⁴⁶ However, the validity of such a franchise is not affected by the fact that it is not advantageous to the municipality,⁴⁷ or is injudicious,⁴⁸ or, in the absence of fraud, because of inadequacy of consideration, where the municipality has received all the consideration it had contracted for.⁴⁹

Effect of partial invalidity. The partial invalidity of a franchise ordinance does not necessarily affect the validity of the whole.⁵⁰ However, it has been held that, where a franchise ordinance which authorizes a street railway company to operate its lines on two streets is void as to one of those streets because of the company's lack of power to accept the ordinance, it is equally void as to the other street.⁵¹

Right to attack. Where a municipality in granting a franchise to a street railway company acts as agent of the state, as discussed supra § 29, the franchise is from the state, and, hence, the municipality cannot attack the validity of the franchise by action, where the state declines to do so.⁵² Except as he may be entitled to relief as an abutting owner, as discussed infra § 100, a taxpayer is not, as such, entitled to attack the validity of a franchise granted by the municipality and enjoin the use thereof by the grantee.⁵³ Complainants who have no right to the use and occupation of streets and highways covered by branches and extensions of a street railroad have no standing to ask a court of equity to enjoin it from asserting its right to such use and occupation.⁵⁴ Hence, individuals who have filed articles of association with the secretary of state as a step toward procuring a charter as a street railroad company have no standing before the charter has issued to question the right of a railroad company to maintain extensions secured as provided by a statute.⁵⁵

§ 51. — Validation of Defective or Invalid Grant or Consent

If the ordinance or resolution granting the franchise is void because it confers on the corporation authority to exercise power not given to it by the articles of association, it cannot be validated by a second ordinance, but a grant by a municipality, which is invalid by reason of irregularity, may be confirmed and ratified by an act of the legislature.

If the ordinance or resolution granting the franchise is void because it confers on the corporation authority to exercise power not given to it by the articles of association, it cannot be validated by a second ordinance or resolution;⁵⁶ but, where a second ordinance is complete and valid in itself, it is not invalid because it is passed as an amendment to a void act,⁵⁷ or because it is granted under a mistake of law or of fact as to the validity of the prior ordinance;⁵⁸ and a grant by a municipality, which is invalid by reason of irregularity, may be confirmed and ratified by an act of the legislature.⁵⁹

New franchise. A statute which merely confirms and regulates a franchise previously possessed by another company and which does not give any new authority to lay tracks does not confer a new franchise.⁶⁰

§ 52. Sale to Highest Bidder

Under some constitutional or statutory provisions, street railroad franchises must be sold to the highest bidder, or, in some instances, to the bidder offering to transport passengers at the lowest rate of fare; but such provisions do not apply to an extension of a line of road already in operation, or a removal of the right to operate a street railroad at the expiration of the term fixed by the franchise.

the use of streets must be sold to the highest bidder, or, in some instances, to the bidder offering to transport passengers at the lowest rate of fare.⁶¹ Where such provisions exist, the sale of the franchise must be in compliance therewith,⁶² for example, with regard to such matters as the petition of abutting owners,⁶³ the consent of the municipal authorities,⁶⁴ the granting ordinance,⁶⁵ notice,⁶⁶ conditions,⁶⁷ and as to the award to the best bidder.⁶⁸ It is immaterial who the bidder is, whether an individual or a corporation, and, if there is a compliance with the terms of the sale, the highest bid must be accepted;⁶⁹ and a sale is not illegal because it happens that one purchaser, without his connivance or procurement, and without fraud, collusion, or undue influence being shown, is in a position, by reason of his situation, to bid a price higher than another;⁷⁰ but, where such conditions are incorporated in the franchise that in the natural course of things there will be only one bidder, a sale to him is void as in effect a private sale.⁷¹

Mere inadvertence or informality in the use of words which do not go to the substance of the bid will not invalidate the sale,⁷² and in general the duty of the local authorities consists in deciding which is the best bid within the meaning of the statute, without inquiring into the motives of the bidder,⁷³ but they have authority to reject a bid which they find to be frivolous or fraudulent.⁷⁴

Where a constitutional provision imposes certain taxes on street railroads in lieu of all other taxes and licenses, but does not release railways from payment of any "amount agreed to be paid or required by law to be paid for any special privilege or franchise," the company is not released from the payment of percentages of gross receipts required under statutes providing for grants of franchises to the highest bidders.⁷⁵

Adjustment or modification of franchises. A constitutional or statutory provision requiring sale of a franchise to the highest bidder does not apply to an ordinance for the purpose of adjusting existing franchises so that they shall be uniform in terms and expire simultaneously, but which does not propose to extend operations to any street or portion of any street on which operations were not at the time conducted.⁷⁶ So it has been held not to apply to an arrangement for the purpose of relocating the track of a railroad under an existing franchise for the benefit of the city and traveling public⁷⁷ or mere modification in a detail of the execution of the existing franchise.⁷⁸

Renewals and extensions. Statutes of this nature have been held not to apply to an extension of a line of road already in operation,⁷⁹ or a renewal of the right to operate a street railroad at the expiration of the term fixed by the franchise.⁸⁰

3. CONSENT OF ABUTTING OWNERS

§ 53. For Use of Streets and Highways

The consent of abutting owners to the use of streets and highways by street railroads, as an element of the grant of a franchise to a street railroad, is considered infra §§ 54-69. The right of abutting owners to raise objections to the proposed location or method of construction of a street railroad is discussed supra § 23.

Examine Pocket Parts for later cases.

§ 54. — Necessity in General

Ordinarily the owner of land abutting on a public street has no such right or interest in the street as to make his consent necessary for the construction and operation of a street railroad thereon; but under some constitutional or statutory provisions, the consent of abutting owners, or at least of some of them, may be required.

Except as it may be conferred by constitutional or statutory provisions, the owner of land abutting on a public street has no such right or interest in the lands included within the street as to make his consent necessary for the construction and operation of a street railroad thereon,⁸¹ and the legislature may, unless there are constitutional restraints, authorize the construction and operation of a street railroad without the consent of abutting owners.⁸² However, by some constitutional or statutory provisions, the consent of abutting owners, or at least of some of them may be required.⁸³ Accordingly, where it is so provided, no law may authorize the construction or operation of a street railroad except where the consent of a specified proportion of the owners of abutting property has been obtained, or, in lieu thereof, there has been a judicial determination that the road should be constructed.⁸⁴ Where a statute requires either the permission of the municipal authorities or the consent of property owners, either will be sufficient.⁸⁵

ting owners, where it is provided by statute that the council may renew such grant at its expiration on such terms as shall be conducive to public interest.⁸⁶

§ 55. — Grant of Franchise and Right to Operate Distinguished

Under some provisions, consent of abutting owners is not a prerequisite to the granting of a franchise to a street railroad corporation, but such consent is merely required before the grant may be made effective upon any particular street.

A city charter provision requiring the written consent of abutting owners to the operation of a street railroad upon a particular street does not make such consent a prerequisite to the granting of a franchise to a street railroad corporation, but merely requires the consent before the grant may be effective upon any particular street.⁸⁷

§ 56. — Elevated Railroads

Ordinarily the construction of an elevated railroad requires the same consent of abutting owners as other street railroads.

Where a company incorporated under the general railroad law has no special power conferred on it by the legislature to build an elevated railroad in the streets of a city, it cannot do so without securing the consent of abutting owners in the manner required of other street railroads.⁸⁸

§ 57. — Temporary Tracks

A city may grant the right to construct a temporary track, without procuring the consent of abutting owners which is ordinarily required.

Notwithstanding a general requirement of the consent of abutting owners, it has been held that a city may, without such consent, grant the right to construct a temporary track, since it is not a grant, but a revocable license.⁸⁹

§ 58. — Extensions

Where an extension of a road already in existence is proposed, consent of the abutting owners on the proposed extension may be necessary.

Under statutes requiring the consent of abutting owners, where the extension of a road already in existence is proposed, the consent of the abutting owners on the proposed extension must be obtained.⁹⁰ However, new consents from the abutting owners on the part of the line already built need not be obtained.⁹¹

§ 59. — Additional Tracks

Where a single-track road has been lawfully constructed with the consent of abutting owners, as required by law, and it is afterward proposed to construct another track on the same street, consent of the abutting owners is necessary for the proposed construction.

Under statutes requiring the consent of abutting owners, where a single-track road has been lawfully constructed with such consent, and it is afterward proposed to construct another track on the same street, the consent of the abutting owners is necessary.⁹² A constitutional requirement of the consent of abutting owners to the construction of a street railroad is applicable to a statute allowing the depression of the tracks of a steam railroad having a right to operate along a street and the construction of a street railroad upon the surface level over the depressed tracks where the effect is to authorize the construction of two railroads in the street where but one existed before.⁹³

§ 60. — Switches and Turnouts

A requirement of consent of abutters does not apply to the grant of a right to construct a turnout or a switch.

It has been held that a requirement of consent of abutters does not apply to the grant of a right to construct a turnout or a switch.⁹⁴

Initiative ordinance

A statute, providing that permission shall not be granted to extend a streetcar line until written consent of the owners of more than one half of the abutting property has been produced to the council or commissioners, does not require the securing of such consent as a condition precedent to the introduction of an initiative ordinance providing for extension.—Cincinnati v. Hillenbrand, 133 N.E. 556, 103 Ohio St. 286.

§ 61. — On Consolidation of Municipalities

Where municipalities are consolidated on terms permitting franchises originally granted to extend over the entire consolidated city, consent of abutting owners is not required on expiration of a franchise as to a portion of a line for which such consent was not originally required.

Where municipalities are consolidated and it is provided by the act of consolidation that the franchises granted by one of the constituents shall extend over the entire consolidated city, on expiration of a franchise granted by the other constituent as to a portion of a railroad line it is not necessary to obtain the consent of abutting owners to a continuance of the operation of the road over such portion of the line, although such consent had been required as a condition to the original grant of the franchise with respect to the other constituent municipalities.⁹⁵

§ 62. — Franchise to New Company

Where a franchise has expired, a new company seeking to construct and operate on the same street must first obtain the consent of abutting owners as required in the case of an original use of the street.

A franchise granting the right to operate a street railway upon a certain street having expired, a new company seeking to construct and operate upon the same street must first obtain the consent of a majority of the abutting property owners thereon as required in the case of an original use of the street.⁹⁶

§ 63. — Nature and Scope of Right to Consent

The nature, scope, and extent of the right or privilege of abutting owners conferred by constitutional or statutory provisions with respect to consent of such owners to the grant of a street railroad franchise depend entirely on the provisions conferring it. Ordinarily such provisions do not confer new rights in the street on the abutting owner but merely create a condition under which the municipality is without power to grant a franchise unless the condition is fulfilled.

96. Ohio.—Isom v. Low Fare R. Co., 29 Ohio Cir.Ct. 583, 10 Ohio Cir.Ct. N.S., 89.

The nature, scope, and extent of the right or privilege of abutting owners conferred by organic or statutory provisions with respect to consent of such owners to the grant of a street railroad franchise depend entirely on the provisions conferring it.⁹⁷ Requirements of their consent have been held not to constitute a delegation of power to the owners, but merely to create a condition under which the municipality is without power to grant a franchise to a street railroad company unless the condition is fulfilled.⁹⁸ They do not confer any new rights in the street on the abutting owner.⁹⁹

The right to consent is not a special privilege¹ or property right,² inconsistent with the rule that abutting owners have no right in a street superior to those of the general public.³ It is a personal right or option⁴ which the property owner may exercise or withhold without compulsion from other owners, public authorities, or the courts,⁵ and which in consequence cannot be appropriated under the power of eminent domain.⁶

§ 64. — Who May Give Consent

A requirement that consent be given by the "owner" of the property involved has been held to be satisfied when given by the owner of a life estate, by devisees, or by a trustee in whom the legal title is vested; but the requirement is not satisfied by the consent of a tenant of the property. Generally consent may be given by a duly authorized agent.

A requirement that consent be given by the "owner" of the property involved has been held to be satisfied when given by the owner of a life estate,⁷ by the vendee of land under a contract to convey who is not in default under his contract and who is in possession of the land,⁸ by devisees,⁹ by a trustee in whom the legal title is vested,¹⁰ by the equitable owner where the trustee holding the legal title has declined to express himself as to being willing or unwilling,¹¹ and by a remainderman who has charge and who is in possession of the property.¹² On the other hand, the requirement has been held not satisfied by the consent of a tenant of the property,¹³ of fathers and guardians of minor children who are owners,¹⁴ of husbands of wives who hold the legal titles,¹⁵ or of executors,¹⁶ except where it is provided by statute that consent may be given by an executor holding the legal title.¹⁷ Where property is owned by tenants in common, the consent of all is required.¹⁸

Mortgages. Where a mortgage passes no title, and is nothing more than a lien or security for a debt, the consent of a mortgagee of abutting property is not the consent of the abutting owner, and is of no effect;¹⁹ but it has been held that a consent given by the holder of the legal title of an abutting lot cannot be affected by his subsequent admission that deeds to him are merely mortgages and that his interest is only that of a mortgagee in possession.²⁰

City owning property abutting on the street along which it is proposed to construct and operate a street railroad may consent as a landowner,²¹ notwithstanding it acts in a dual capacity.²²

Corporations. A corporation may consent as the owner of property²³ where the consent is executed as the act of the corporation.²⁴

Board of education, having no title to lands on which school buildings stand, is not their owner, and cannot give a valid consent.²⁵

Agents. It is very generally held that consent may be given by a duly authorized agent, although such consent is not specially provided for by the provisions requiring it;²⁶ and, by some provisions, express authority for consent by agents is given;²⁷ and it is not essential to the validity of the consent that the authority of the agent should appear on the instrument giving it,²⁸ or that he should have been authorized in writing.²⁹ However, if the authority of one signing as agent is challenged, the agency must be proved as in other cases.³⁰

Ownership to center of street. Where the statute requires the consent of the owners of at least one half of the amount in lineal feet of property fronting on the street through which permission to construct has been asked, the right to consent belongs to every owner of property fronting on the street regardless of his ownership to the center of the street.³¹

Consent of unauthorized person may be ratified or adopted by the owner and the consent thereby given validity,³² provided timely action is taken to ratify or adopt the consent.³³

§ 65. — Purchase of Consents; Conditions

An agreement for the purchase of the consent of a property owner to the laying down of a street railway in the street on which his property abuts for a consideration inuring to the exclusive benefit of such owner is against public policy and void, and hence will not be enforced at the instance of the property holder; but the consent may be held valid for the purpose of authorizing the municipal authorities to act.

Although there is authority to the contrary,³⁴ it has been held that an agreement for the purchase of the consent of a property owner to the laying down of a street railway in the street on which his property abuts for money or for a consideration inuring to the exclusive benefit of such owner is, where made for the purpose of securing the action of the municipal authorities, against public policy and void,³⁵ and, in consequence, the courts will refuse to enforce such an agreement at the instance of the property holders.³⁶ However, it has been held that, although a condition or proviso is against public policy, it may be disregarded and the consent held valid for the purpose of authorizing the municipal authorities to act,³⁷ and that the legislative body may lawfully disregard the proviso.³⁸

Conditions in franchises. Where a franchise is granted on condition that the injury to abutting property owners shall be ascertained, and the railroad enters into an agreement with an abutting owner whereby he consents to its construction and waives damage resulting therefrom on condition that the company will vacate the track if it becomes necessary to close the street in question, such agreement may be refused.³⁹

Conditions forbidden by statute. A property owner in giving his consent to the construction of a street railroad cannot attach conditions thereto which are in direct contravention of the statute under which the franchise is granted.⁴⁰

Nonconsenting abutting owners may not complain of violations by the grantee of conditions imposed by those who consented when the consenting owners do not themselves complain.⁴¹

§ 66. — Requisites and Sufficiency

- a. In general
- b. Number required

a. In General

When so provided by statute, the consent of an abutting owner to the construction and operation of a street railroad must be in writing, signed, acknowledged, sealed, and filed or recorded, in order to be valid and effective.

When so provided by statute, the consent of abutting owners to the construction and operation of a street railroad must be in writing,⁴² signed,⁴³ acknowledged,⁴⁴ sealed,⁴⁵ and filed or recorded,⁴⁶ in order to be valid and effective; but, in the absence of a statutory requirement to that effect, sealing⁴⁷ or recording⁴⁸ of consents is not necessary. A consent to the construction of a street railroad is, in the absence of an apparent intention of the legislature to the contrary, sufficient, and it need not be to the mode and manner of the construction and operation of the road.⁴⁹ A petition addressed to court commissioners advocating a particular location for the road does not operate as a consent by the property owner.⁵⁰

To whom given. Consents procured fairly and in good faith by an individual interested in the railroad and transferred by him to the railroad company are not invalid by reason of the fact that they run to the individual instead of to the corporation and have been acquired by the latter through an intermediary by assignment instead of directly from the property owners themselves.⁵¹

Time when obtained. It is not, unless the terms of the statute so provide, necessary to the validity of a grant to construct a street railway that the number of consents of abutting property owners required by the statute should have been obtained prior to the publication of the notice inviting bids for the construction and operation of such railway as required by another statute.⁵²

Consent by municipality. Municipal consent to the construction and operation of a road operates also as a consent of the municipality as a property owner.⁵³

b. Number Required

The number of consents required and the determination of what property is to be included in the calculation depend on a construction of the constitutional or statutory provisions requiring the consent of abutting owners to the construction and operation of a street railroad.

Generally, where constitutional or statutory provisions require the consent of abutting owners to the construction and operation of a street railroad, the number of consents required and the determination of what property is to be included in the calculation depend on a construction of these provisions.⁵⁴ Under a statute requiring as a prerequisite to the construction of a street railroad the consent of owners of one half in value of the property bounded on that portion of the street upon which it is proposed to construct such railroad, all property bounded on such street, although fronting on another, is to be considered in determining the proportion of property bounded on the street, the owners of which have given their consent.⁵⁵ The value of an entire tract abutting on the street with buildings thereon, being used as an entirety for a single purpose, is to be considered, although it extends back to another street;⁵⁶ but the company is not entitled to the benefit of a consent in behalf of all of a piece of land, part of which is upon the line of the road, and part of which is not.⁵⁷ Within the meaning of a statute of this character, the property on all four corners of two intersecting streets is bounded by the intersecting space common to both; and where a proposed route runs south through one street to the intersection, and thence west through the other, the consent of the owner of the southeast corner, opposite its outer curve, should be counted in making up the requisite one half in value.⁵⁸

Road extending along several streets. A statute requiring the consent of owners of more than one half of the foot frontage of the land abutting on the street along which it is proposed to construct the road requires, where more than one street is to be occupied, the consent of a majority of property holders on each street as a prerequisite to the construction of a road along these streets.⁵⁹ Under a constitution and statute requiring the majority consent in value of the property bounded on a street or highway upon which it is proposed to construct a road, the consent is required on "a street" where construction is proposed, not on the route of combined streets,⁶⁰ and where the required number of consents of property owners on one street has been obtained, a road may be constructed upon such street, although the owners of other streets have not yet granted their consent.⁶¹

Road extending beyond city limits. Where the proposed route is partly outside the jurisdiction of a municipality, it will be sufficient to support a grant for the part of the route within such jurisdiction that the consent of the owners of the requisite proportion of frontage on that part of the route be obtained and filed.⁶²

*In estimating number of lineal feet of property necessary to authorize the consent of a municipality to the construction of a street railway, the cross streets are to be omitted.*⁶³

Consent of municipality as abutting owner. The consent of a municipality to the construction of a street railroad along a street on which it is an abutting owner may be counted in ascertaining whether a majority of the frontage has consented to the granting of the franchise.⁶⁴

Consent obtained by fraud. Where the consent of more than the required number of property owners was properly obtained, the fact that the consent of two others was obtained by fraud does not affect the validity of the company's right.⁶⁵

§ 67. — Operation and Effect of Consent

Where the consent of abutting owners is a condition precedent to the right to construct a street railroad, the consent when granted is more than a mere license, and is a species of property. The effectiveness of the consent is not impaired by a subsequent alienation of his land by the person giving the consent, and, while the consent may be revoked before final action has been taken thereon, it is not revocable at the will of the person giving it after it has been acted on.

is more than a mere license, as it confers valuable rights,⁶⁶ and is a species of property;⁶⁷ but, where the statutes require consent as a condition precedent to the vesting of jurisdiction in municipal authorities to grant a franchise or permit to use the street, it has been held that the consent is neither a license nor a concession granting the company some interest in land or right in the street, but is merely the statutory mode of conferring on the municipal authorities jurisdiction to grant a franchise or permit to the railroad company to use the streets.⁶⁸ Under either class of provisions, the effectiveness of the consent is not impaired by a subsequent alienation of his land by the person giving the consent.⁶⁹ While it has been held that a consent necessary to give jurisdiction to the local authorities to grant a franchise or permit may be revoked before final action has been taken thereon by them,⁷⁰ neither this class of consent nor the consent made necessary by some provisions as a condition precedent to the construction of the road is revocable at the will of the person giving it or his successors, after it has been acted on.⁷¹ The consent is, however, limited to the purpose for which it was given;⁷² and it can not be made the basis of further municipal action on a second application.⁷³

To whose benefit consents inure. Under statutes requiring the franchise to be granted to that person or corporation that offers to carry passengers for the lowest rate of fare, the consents, by whomsoever obtained, inure to the benefit of the lowest bidder,⁷⁴ and need not in terms be given to the person who is the lowest bidder, since the contract can be awarded to him alone.⁷⁵

As abandonment of easements. The consent of the abutting owner may operate as an abandonment of his easements depriving him of right to compensation,⁷⁶ or to claim damages consequent on the erection and operation of the road.⁷⁷

As bar to action to restrain maintenance of road. Consent will defeat an equity action to restrain the maintenance of a street railroad which was being operated according to the terms of its charter.⁷⁸ Where the requisite number of consents has been obtained, a nonconsenting owner of abutting property may maintain an action for his damages, but cannot prevent the construction of the road.⁷⁹

Where part of street not dedicated. Where consent is obtained for the construction of a railroad over a street, part of which is subsequently shown not to have been dedicated to public use, the consent is inoperative even as to those parts of the street properly laid out and dedicated because the thing consented to and the thing given are radically different.⁸⁰

§ 68. — Who Entitled to Assert Failure to Obtain

Generally the failure to obtain the required number of consents to the construction and operation of a street railroad can be availed of only by the abutting owners; but a nonconsenting abutting owner may contest the construction and operation of the road on the ground that the required number of consents has not been obtained, his right in this regard being confined to the street on which his property abuts.

As discussed supra § 63, statutes which require the consent of a designated proportion of the abutting owners to the construction and operation of a street railroad confer a right personal to them, and, while there is some authority to the contrary,⁸¹ it has generally been held that failure to obtain the required number of consents can be availed of only by the abutting owners.⁸² Therefore, a municipality cannot attack its grant of a franchise to construct and operate a street railroad on the ground that the requisite number of consents of abutting property owners had not been obtained,⁸³ nor can a taxpayer.⁸⁴ However, a nonconsenting abutting owner may contest the construction and operation of the road on the ground that the required number of consents has not been obtained,⁸⁵ although his right in this respect is confined to the street on which his property abuts,⁸⁶ and the burden of proof is on him to show that the required number of consents has not been obtained;⁸⁷ and he is entitled to an injunction against the construction of the road if this fact is established by him.⁸⁸

Estoppel. A property owner who has given consent to entry on his land by a street railroad company for construction of its road is estopped to sue to enjoin such entry on the ground that the necessary consent of all owners affected had not been obtained,⁸⁹ but the fact that he has given his consent to the construction of the road does not affect his right to object to construction in front of other property on the street which he afterward buys.⁹⁰ Also, a vendee of property is not estopped by a consent given by the vendor but not recorded until after the conveyance of the property.⁹¹

§ 69. — Determination by Commissioners in Lieu of Consent of Abutting Owners

- a. In general
- b. Application, parties, and notice
- c. Hearing and determination of commissioners
- d. Operation and effect of determination; confirmation by court

a. In General

Under some constitutional and statutory provisions, whenever the requisite number of abutting property owners fails or refuses to consent to the routes and plans of the construction of a street railroad, a proceeding may be instituted by application or petition of the street railroad company to the proper court for the appointment of commissioners to determine the matter, whose determination that the road shall be constructed and operated, when confirmed by the court, may be taken in lieu of the consent of the abutting owners.

In some jurisdictions, under provisions of the constitution and enabling statutes, whenever the requisite number of abutting property owners, as required by statute, fails or refuses to consent to the routes and plans of the construction of a street railroad,⁹² a proceeding in the nature of a special proceeding in rem⁹³ may be instituted by application or petition of the street railroad company to the proper court⁹⁴ for the appointment of commissioners to determine the matter, whose determination that the road shall be constructed and operated, when confirmed by the court, may be taken in lieu of the consent of the abutting owners.⁹⁵ The only condition precedent to the appointment of such commissioners is the failure to obtain the requisite consent of abutting property owners;⁹⁶ and, when this condition is properly shown to exist, the court is not vested with any discretion in the premises but must appoint the commissioners,⁹⁷ and cannot grant or deny the application on a consideration of the question of the utility or necessity of the proposed road,⁹⁸ and that an existing company, owning and maintaining a road coincident with the proposed road, has refused its consent to the construction and operation of the proposed road.⁹⁹

Effect of pendency. The company is not estopped by the pending of proceedings for the appointment of commissioners to show that, since the commencement of such proceedings, it has obtained a sufficient number of consents.¹

Application for the appointment of commissioners to determine the right to construct and operate a street railroad may be made by the street railroad company, on its failure to obtain the required consent of property owners, and notice of the application must be given to nonconsenting property owners in the time and manner prescribed by the statute. Only those persons who are interested in the affected property are proper parties to the proceeding.

Under the constitutional and statutory provisions discussed generally supra subdivision a of this section, application for the appointment of commissioners to determine the right to construct and operate a street railroad may be made by the street railroad company, on its failure to obtain the required consent of property owners,² at any time before the construction or operation of the proposed road is commenced,³ except that it cannot be made until after the proposed route has been fixed.⁴ The application or petition and accompanying affidavit must make a positive and affirmative statement, not merely of inferences or conclusions,⁵ but of facts which show that proper application was made to the property owners and that the requisite number refused to consent.⁶

The petition may precede the giving of any consent by the local municipal authorities,⁷ and, therefore, need not make any allegation as to the filing of such consent.⁸ Where a corporation desiring to construct its road through various streets fails to obtain the necessary consent of property owners with respect to one street or any number of streets less than the total named in the articles of association, it may apply for the appointment of commissioners to determine whether the railroad should be constructed and operated along those streets, without including all the streets through which, under its charter, it was to construct, maintain, and operate its road,⁹ and several applications may be made with respect to particular streets.¹⁰

Parties. Only those persons who are interested in property along the street or streets with respect to which the petition is presented are proper parties thereto.¹¹

Notice. Notice of the application must be given to nonconsenting property owners in the time and manner prescribed by the statute,¹² and this is true of notice of the hearings by the commissioners.¹³

c. Hearing and Determination of Commissioners

Commissioners to whom application is made for approval of the construction and operation of a street railroad, notwithstanding the failure to secure the consent of abutting owners, must grant a hearing at which all persons interested have an opportunity to be heard; at such hearing the commissioners are not bound to strict compliance with rules of evidence, or to any particular method of procedure except as specified by statute, but their action is judicial in character and must to a reasonable extent conform to judicial methods.

After proper notice has been given the commissioners, to whom application is made for approval of the construction and operation of a street railroad, notwithstanding the failure to secure the consent of abutting owners, must grant a hearing at which all persons interested have an opportunity to be heard.¹⁴ At such hearing the commissioners are not bound to strict compliance with rules of evidence, or to any particular method of procedure except as specified by statute, but their action is judicial in character and must to a reasonable extent conform to judicial methods.¹⁵ They may refuse to receive oral proof and require affidavits,¹⁶ and may consider all the circumstances bearing on the necessity for the proposed road as located,¹⁷ such as whether other routes are equally available,¹⁸ or whether the benefits which will ensue from the construction of the road will counterbalance the injury to private interests which will result therefrom,¹⁹ and, furthermore, they are not confined to the consideration of the evidence before them, but may use their own judgment and examine the situation for themselves.²⁰

The only question for the determination of the commissioners is whether the proposed road on the route designated should be constructed and operated,²¹ and such question is to be decided in the first instance by them.²² Where the proposed road is to extend along several streets, the commissioners may allow a road in some of the streets on the routes fixed and disallow it as to others, as long as a complete road on some route is left;²³ and, where connections are proposed to several ferries and depots, they may determine that some connections should, and some should not, be made,²⁴ but they have no power to consent to the construction of a road according to amended plans which have not been submitted to the property owners.²⁵

Where the commissioners' determination or report is unfavorable to the road as located, ordinarily it is final,

except where it is affected with fraud, mistake, or gross irregularity, in which case it is the duty of the court to set the report aside. The determination of the commissioners, when in favor of the construction of the road, must be confirmed by the court which appointed them before it becomes final and effective, and it is within the discretion of the court whether or not to confirm the commissioners' report.

Where the commissioners' determination or report is unfavorable to the road as located, ordinarily it is final,²⁶ except where it is affected with fraud, mistake, or gross irregularity,²⁷ in which case it is the duty of the court to set the report aside and appoint other commissioners,²⁸ or to remit the matter to the same commissioners with proper instructions.²⁹ Where, however, the report is to the effect that the road should not be built in a certain street, under existing conditions, a confirmation of the report is not an adjudication that a road should never be constructed in that street, so as to preclude a subsequent application.³⁰ On a motion to set aside an unfavorable report, it is the duty of the court either to refuse to hear the motion where no grounds or reasons for interference were specified in the notice of motion,³¹ or to examine the record and decide whether the methods pursued by the commissioners were substantially within the law.³²

Favorable report; confirmation. In accordance with the provisions of the constitution, the determination of the commissioners, when in favor of the construction of the road, must be confirmed by the court which appointed them before it becomes final and effective.³³ It is within the discretion of the court whether or not to confirm the commissioners' report,³⁴ and, in considering the question of confirmation, the court exercises judicial and not merely formal functions,³⁵ and has power to examine the merits of the case,³⁶ and to attach conditions to its confirmation;³⁷ but it has no power to pass on the merits of an application until after the commissioners have made their report and returned the evidence taken by them.³⁸ In order to have the report of the commissioners confirmed, an applicant must affirmatively show a sufficient public necessity to overcome the protest of property owners.³⁹

Persons affected by determination. On confirmation the report becomes conclusive as to all questions necessarily involved, on all interested persons having due notice of the proceedings and an opportunity to be heard,⁴⁰ but it does not bind or in any manner affect property owners along other streets not mentioned in the petition,⁴¹ and such owners have a right to oppose the granting of a petition or the making of a determination in a proceeding taken with respect to their streets, irrespective of the determination of the commissioners in the prior proceedings.⁴²

Review. An order of the court confirming or refusing to confirm the report of commissioners, made in the exercise of its discretion and on the merits, has been held not be reviewable,⁴³ except that, where a motion to confirm the report of the commissioners is denied solely on legal grounds and legal objections as to the right of petitioner to construct and operate a street railway, the appellate court may review the questions of law involved.⁴⁴

§ 70. To Use of Turnpikes or Toll Roads

When required by statute, the consent of abutting owners to the use of a turnpike by a street railroad company must be obtained, although the turnpike company has given its consent.

When required by statute, the consent of abutting owners to the use of a turnpike by a street railroad company must be obtained,⁴⁵ although the turnpike company has given its consent.⁴⁶ Prior to obtaining the requisite consent, the right of the company to exercise its franchise is still an inchoate, and not a vested, right.⁴⁷

B. CONSTRUCTION AND OPERATION OF GRANT IN GENERAL

§ 71. General Rules of Construction

A grant of street franchise rights to a street railroad company, if ambiguous, is to be strictly construed against the company and in favor of the public; but everything which is reasonably proper to effect the essential objects of the grant passes by necessary implication, except where it is in derogation of public rights. In construing the franchise, consideration may sometimes be given to the facts and conditions existing when the franchise was given, and to the practical construction of the franchise by the parties.

The construction of a street railroad franchise, in case of dispute, is a judicial question for the courts,⁴⁸ and, in accordance with the rules relating to the construction of franchises in general, a grant of street franchise rights to a street railroad company, if ambiguous, is to be strictly construed against the company and in favor of the public,⁴⁹ and the company can claim no privilege which arises by mere inference and is not clearly given to it by the grant.⁵⁰ So the courts cannot by interpretation enlarge rights conferred on a street railway by municipal ordinance.⁵¹ This does not mean,

Derogation of public use not implied

The extent of grant to construct and operate railroad in street is limited to what is expressly granted and nothing in derogation of public use is implied.—Di Blasi v. Pennsylvania R. Co., 63 A.2d 70, 361 Pa. 181.

however, that the franchise is to be given a strained or unnatural construction which will defeat the manifest purpose of the grant,⁵² and as the grant is made for the benefit of the grantee, and also for the express accommodation and benefit of the public, everything which is reasonably proper and necessary to effect the essential objects of the grant passes by necessary implication,⁵³ except where it is in derogation of public rights.⁵⁴ If the franchise is susceptible of two constructions, one legal and the other not, that interpretation will be adopted which will support the franchise and make it operative.⁵⁵

In construing the franchise, consideration may be given to the facts and conditions existing when the franchise was granted,⁵⁶ and to the practical construction of the franchise by the parties.⁵⁷ So the court may consider the company's long-continued interpretation of its franchise in which the public has acquiesced,⁵⁸ and, in the absence of some controlling rule of law, the court will follow the contemporaneous construction placed on the franchise by the legislative body of the city.⁵⁹ If, however, the grant is expressed in clear and unambiguous language, the intention of the parties, as so expressed, will be given effect,⁶⁰ by construing the franchise agreement as a whole,⁶¹ and construing, together with the facts and circumstances, the language employed in the grant in its natural and ordinary sense,⁶² and without resorting to the practical construction placed on the grant by the parties.⁶³

Construed with statutes. As the authority of the state is paramount in the granting of such rights, the statutes of the state with respect thereto enter into a grant made by a municipality and are controlling in case of conflict,⁶⁴ and, therefore, the company can obtain only such franchise powers as the city may lawfully grant, and must take its franchise subject to the limitations imposed on the city officials in the exercise of their powers to grant a franchise.⁶⁵ However, a construction of the statute which is most strongly adverse to a company assuming to build and operate its road under the provision of the act or any section thereof should not be adopted,⁶⁶ and the public is not entitled, as of course, to the benefit of any doubt as to the true construction of the language in such statute;⁶⁷ and, on the other hand, the fact that a street railroad company which holds a grant from the city is incorporated under the general railroad laws does not give it any greater franchise rights.⁶⁸

§ 72. Nature and Extent of Rights Acquired in General

The use of streets and public highways by street railroad companies is a legitimate public use, which is not inconsistent with street uses; and the right to such use conferred by a franchise is a property right, in the nature of an easement, which will be protected by a court of equity from unauthorized interference. Such right of use of the streets is not superior to, but is in common with, the general public.

It is recognized that the use of streets and public highways by street railroad companies is a legitimate public use,⁶⁹ which does not impose any additional servitude, as discussed in Eminent Domain § 133, and which is not inconsistent with street uses.⁷⁰ The right of a street railroad to use streets and highways has been described as "an incorporeal right,"⁷¹ a property right in the nature of an easement,⁷² an easement,⁷³ "an easement in the street,"⁷⁴ or part of the easement of the public in the streets.⁷⁵ Such right has also been referred to as a special franchise,⁷⁶ a privilege or permit to use the public ways,⁷⁷ or a right in the nature of a license to occupy portions of the street for purposes of travel;⁷⁸ and it is more than the mere right to operate a railroad.⁷⁹

While a street railroad company has no property in the soil of the street or highway,⁸⁰ its right to use the street is nevertheless a property right⁸¹ which survives the dissolution of the corporation by legislative act,⁸² is entitled to all the constitutional protection afforded other property rights,⁸³ and is transferable as such independent of the life of the corporation,⁸⁴ even in the absence of terms in the grant which authorize a transfer to others of the rights therein granted.⁸⁵ A court of equity will protect such right from unauthorized interference by injunction.⁸⁶ The occupancy of the street railroad is not exclusive of,⁸⁷ and is not superior to, but is in common with, the general public,⁸⁸ all persons being at liberty to drive upon and over the tracks when they are laid in the traveled portion of the street,⁸⁹ and the rights of each must be ex-

exercised in a reasonable and careful manner, so as not unnecessarily to abridge or interfere with the rights of the other.⁹⁰ Such use and occupancy are also subject to the right of the city to pave the street, construct sewers, or make other necessary public improvements,⁹¹ and to remove, or cause to be removed, the tracks when they no longer subserved the purposes for which they were intended,⁹² as the company will not be permitted to obstruct a street for the purpose of holding a right therein, and not for the purpose of serving the public.⁹³

Carriage of freight. A franchise to operate "interurban cars" has been held to authorize the carriage of freight or express as incidental to passenger service in interurban cars also available for passenger service,⁹⁴ but a franchise expressly or impliedly authorizing the carriage of freight only as an incident to passenger service does not authorize the operation of cars to be used exclusively for the transportation of freight.⁹⁵ In this respect, in determining whether the service of an electric railway company is primarily freight or passenger, the factors to be considered are the construction of the cars, the space allotted to each service, the comparative revenues therefrom, and other such matters.⁹⁶

§ 73. Exclusive and Conflicting Grants

- a. In general
- b. Conflicting grants

a. In General

The granting of a right of way over and along the streets does not of itself confer on the street railroad company exclusive right to use the streets on which its tracks are laid for transportation purposes; but such a grant confers exclusive privileges as against all persons on whom similar rights have not been conferred. Where the grant does confer an exclusive right, it will not be extended by construction beyond the clear import of its terms.

Since the occupation of streets by a street railway is regarded merely as an additional public use, as discussed supra § 72, the granting of a right of way over and along the streets does not of itself confer on the street railroad company exclusive right to use the streets on which its tracks are laid for transportation purposes,⁹⁷ and the designation of a particular portion of the street for occupation by the tracks merely fixes the location of the tracks.⁹⁸ Such a grant, however, confers exclusive privileges as against all persons on whom similar rights have not been conferred,⁹⁹ and as to the use of its tracks, the right of the street railroad company is exclusive by reason of the mere right of property, at least as against other competing companies.¹

Street railroads are distinct from general utilities in that their relationship to areas is only incidental and there is no ground for an implication that streets are preempted to their sole use, hence, the requirement in the case of general utilities that there must be a showing of public convenience and necessity before a second utility can enter a given area does not apply.—Chicago & Milwaukee Elec. Ry. Co. v. Public Service Commission of Wis., supra.

Franchise to elevated railroad

Franchise to surface railroad will not preclude granting of franchise to elevated railroad.—Ninth Ave. R. Co. v. New York El. R. Co., 7 Daly 174, 3 Abb.N.Cas. 347.

1. Ill.—Peoria Ry. Co. v. Peoria Ry. Terminal Co., 96 N.E. 689, 252 Ill. 73.

60 C.J. p 217 note 31.

Exclusive street railroad franchise to the use of streets may be granted, as discussed supra § 29 b, but as the policy of the law is against all grants of exclusive rights and monopolies, grants to street railroad companies which are claimed to confer an exclusive right, as against rival companies, to the use of particular streets, will be strictly construed,² and will not be held to confer such right unless it is plainly conferred by express words or necessary implication.³ Even where the grant does confer such an exclusive right, it will not be extended by construction beyond the clear import of its terms⁴ and all conditions precedent must be complied with before such right vests.⁵ Such a grant of exclusive rights relates to streets and not to tracks,⁶ and has been held to be exclusive only as to so much of the street as may be actually occupied and necessary for the proper operation of the cars;⁷ but, where the exclusive right is conferred as to all of the streets of the municipality, it applies, as against rival companies, to all of such streets, and not only as to streets on which the grantee has built.⁸

b. Conflicting Grants

Where the grant to a street railroad company is not exclusive, the same or similar rights and franchises in the use of the streets may be given to another company, unless they will conflict with, and cause substantial loss to, the company already occupying the streets, as

by appropriating that portion of the streets which has been granted to the first company and which is being used by it in the operation of its railway system.

Where the grant to a street railroad company is not exclusive, the same or similar rights and franchises in the use of the street or streets may be granted to another company,⁹ unless they will conflict with, and cause substantial loss to, the company already occupying the street or streets,¹⁰ as by appropriating that portion of the streets which has been granted to the first company and which is being used by it in the operation of its railway system.¹¹ The same or similar rights may also be granted to another company where the prior grant, although exclusive, is invalid because it is so,¹² or where it is otherwise ultra vires,¹³ or has been revoked.¹⁴

Priority. Although mere priority of grant does not confer exclusive rights,¹⁵ where valid grants of the right to use the same street or a particular portion thereof have been made to two different companies, the first of the grantees to comply with his franchise and rightfully occupy the street acquires the superior and better claim of right thereto.¹⁶ In some jurisdictions the policy of the legislation is that there shall be no more than one lawfully authorized street railroad track laid upon the same street or highway at the same time,¹⁷ unless the power to grant the use of the street to another company is reserved in the prior grant;¹⁸ in other jurisdictions this policy obtains with the limitation that a second company may be granted the right to occupy the same street on obtaining the consent of the first;¹⁹ and it follows that in such jurisdictions priority of user under a valid grant confers an exclusive right to the streets occupied. Such legislation, however, does not affect the right of the city to construct a street railroad of its own under later legislation,²⁰ as a street railroad company takes its franchise subject to the risk that subsequent legislation might empower the city to establish its own street railway system.²¹

Joint use. A street railroad does not become a part of the street, so as to authorize the public and other companies to use the road with appropriate cars and carriages in common with the owners of the franchise;²² but where a street railroad is granted merely the right to construct and operate a street railroad on the streets, although its trackage system and appurtenances are private property, it may by legislative authority be compelled to permit another company, under proper conditions imposed and compensation provided, to use a portion of its tracks to promote public interest,²³ unless the rendition of that use will result in such detriment or prejudice to the company affected as to make the regulation unreasonable,²⁴ and on this principle it has been held that a later company cannot be granted the right to straddle its tracks over the tracks of a prior company,²⁵ notwithstanding in the grant to the first company the power to grant the common use of the street to another company was reserved.²⁶

place its rails and use the street in such manner that the public may have the benefit which can be derived from such joint use;²⁷ and neither can be permitted unnecessarily to interfere with the right of the other to lay its tracks.²⁸ Where grants, made at the same time, to two companies, authorized one to construct a single-track line or double-track line, and the other a single-track line, on the same street, the single-track company cannot be compelled by the courts to unite with the other company in the building of but two tracks for the joint use of both companies, however reasonable and proper and to the advantage of both companies it may seem to be,²⁹ as such provision can be made only by the municipal authorities at the proper time, and the courts can protect and enforce only the rights of the parties under the grants as made.³⁰

On city bridge. A license to a street railroad company to run its cars on tracks over a city bridge, and to charge not more than a designated fare, and to furnish transfers at the termini contemplates that it shall not inaugurate a pure shuttle service in competition with a company which has a franchise to maintain a shuttle service over the bridge,³¹ and, if it inaugurates such service without having complied with the statutory requirements therefor, it is a trespasser and subject to injunction at the instance of the company having a franchise to maintain a shuttle service over the bridge.³² Where, however, an ordinance prohibiting a company from laying tracks on a certain bridge is intended merely to avoid encumbering the bridge with unnecessary tracks, it does not secure to a company whose tracks are already on the bridge a monopoly of the right of way,³³ and the fact that only those companies that are entitled to occupy the permanent bridge when finished are granted the right to lay tracks on a

§ 74. — Protection and Relief

Where a valid grant of exclusive rights has been made to a street railroad company, the courts will affirm and protect such rights from interference by others, and even where a franchise is not exclusive, if the use and enjoyment of the property of the street railroad will be materially impaired by its use by another company, it may maintain injunction proceedings to restrain such other company from so using its roadbed or tracks, or from occupying the same portion of the street to its injury.

Where a valid grant of exclusive rights has been made to a street railroad company, the courts will affirm and protect such rights,³⁵ as by the issuance, on the application of the grantee, of an injunction against interference by another street railroad company.³⁶ Even where a company's franchise is not exclusive, if its use and enjoyment of its property will be materially impaired by its use by another company, it may maintain injunction proceedings to restrain such other company from so using its roadbed or tracks,³⁷ or from occupying the same portion of the street to its injury.³⁸

It has been held that it is not necessary, in order that one street railway company may question the authority of another company to construct tracks upon the streets of a city, so as to handle business which the first company is lawfully carrying on, that the first company shall have an exclusive franchise,³⁹ but, where it has a lawful right to carry on a street railway business, its right is exclusive as against any person or company which attempts to operate in competition with it upon streets where the second company has no legal authority to go,⁴⁰ and any person or corporation that attempts to exercise such rights without legislative authority invades the private property of the person or corporation to whom such franchise was granted, and may be restrained at the instance of the owner of the franchise.⁴¹

On the other hand, equity cannot protect a street railroad from lawful competition,⁴² and it has been held that a company which has merely the right to construct and operate, and not an exclusive franchise, has no standing to question the right of another company to occupy the streets,⁴³ and, hence, is not entitled to maintain injunction proceedings to prevent another company from using a street for railroad purposes under a similar grant.⁴⁴ Injunctive relief will not be granted to a company which is in default on its agreement as to constructing its road,⁴⁵ and another company which, in good faith, and in pursuance of its charter, afterward begins the construction of a road upon the same streets is entitled to an injunction as against a company which has commenced construction without proper authority therefor.⁴⁶

C. LOCATION OF ROUTE AND TRACKS

appropriation of a particular portion of the street or highway for street railroad use.

highway is a different thing from the right to make such location;⁴⁷ it presupposes a prior grant of the right to locate, and consists of a definite appropriation of a particular portion of the street or highway for street railroad use.⁴⁸ A street railroad company is entitled to establish its road on the streets specified or described generally in the legislative or municipal grant;⁴⁹ but it is confined within the limits thus specified.⁵⁰ However, while the limits fixed by the franchise must be observed, these limits will be liberally construed to uphold the action of the company, and it is enough if they are substantially observed.⁵¹ Reasonable or slight deviations or divergence from chartered routes or location have been held permissible under exceptional conditions;⁵² and the right of a municipality to the aid of a court of equity to prevent a deviation from the original location may be barred by laches or by implied assent to the new location.⁵³ Where the authority to locate is general in its terms, or specifically confers an option on the company as to which streets it will use or what termini it will establish, such option must be exercised within a reasonable time,⁵⁴ and the right to make a location of a railway or of any part of it is a power of election, and when once exercised is exhausted, in the absence of a statute to the contrary.⁵⁵

§ 76. Filing of Map or Plan

If so required by statute, a map or plan of the proposed route must be filed before commencing construction of the road.

If so required by statute, a map or plan of the proposed route must be filed before commencing construction of the road.⁵⁶ Where the map has been filed and approved, and the location made by the plan is in the middle of the street, the street railroad company cannot locate its road on the side of the street.⁵⁷ So it has been held that, where the directors of a company cause a map to be prepared of the location adopted by them and vote to apply to the local authorities for their approval thereof as required by law, such proceedings constitute a definite and final selection and demarcation of the route by the directors of the route indicated on the map.⁵⁸

§ 77. Change of Route or Location

A change of route or location of a street railroad line may be made only under the conditions fixed by the statute pertaining thereto; but all the formalities necessary in making an original grant need not be observed in authorizing a slight change in location.

A change of route⁵⁹ or location⁶⁰ of a street railroad line may be made only under the conditions fixed by the statute pertaining thereto. So, where a statute provides that the route may be changed if it will improve the line theretofore established, this is the only purpose for which a change of route is permissible; the route cannot be changed for the purpose of increasing the revenue of the company.⁶¹ Where a corporation secures a right to construct a street railroad along a certain route by obtaining the consent of abutting property owners, it cannot change its route without their consent.⁶² In some jurisdictions a change of location from the side to the center of the street can be made only with the consent of the municipal or other authorities having charge of the streets;⁶³ but a change is lawful when the city by its tacit acceptance ratifies the act of its agents.⁶⁴ All the formalities necessary in making an original grant need not be observed in authorizing a slight change in location.⁶⁵ Where the franchise of a railway company occupying a street in a town site provided for changing the route by agreement, and the village council with the company's consent changes the route, such change, after being approved by the railroad and warehouse commission, cannot be questioned by taxpayers and residents seeking to enjoin removal of the town to permit mining on the town site.⁶⁶

§ 78. Effect of Widening Street

The widening of a street does not limit the rights of a street railroad to lay tracks and switches to the width of the original street.

The widening of a street does not limit the rights of a street railroad to lay tracks and switches to the width of the original street, but gives it rights in the street as widened.⁶⁷

D. ADDITIONAL TRACKS; BRANCHES, SWITCHES, TURNOUTS, AND THE LIKE; EXTENSIONS AND OTHER STRUCTURES

§ 79. Switches, Turnouts, Sidings, and Loops

A street railroad company may have the right to construct necessary switches, turnouts, or sidings, whether such right is expressly conferred or is implied as an incident to the right to construct the road, and such facilities may be located on streets other than those designated as the route of the railroad where a reasonable necessity exists for the departure; but the right must not be exercised in such a way as arbitrarily and unnecessarily to obstruct public travel, and interfere with the rights of abutting owners.

While the right to construct necessary switches, turnouts, and sidings is sometimes expressly conferred on street railroad companies,⁶⁸ it has very generally been held that the grant of a right to construct a street railroad carries with it, as an incident, the right to construct such turnouts and switches and sidings as public convenience and the successful operation of the road render necessary,⁶⁹ subject, according to some decisions, to the approval of the municipality,⁷⁰ or to the necessity of the laying out of the turnouts or spurs by the municipal authorities.⁷¹ In any event the right to construct must not be exercised in such a way as arbitrarily and unnecessarily to obstruct public travel, and interfere with the rights of abutting owners.⁷² There is no right to construct switches merely on the ground that they would be convenient to the railroad company and would facilitate its business,⁷³ or to construct sidings or spur tracks for private benefit.⁷⁴

Laying on streets not designated in grant. The laying of switches and sidings is not necessarily confined to streets upon which the company was expressly authorized to operate its system, and it may lay them on streets other than those designated as the route of the railroad where a reasonable necessity exists for the departure,⁷⁵ at least where

Presumed intent

Where a street railroad was granted the power to use the streets of a city, but had no express power to construct a switch in the streets, and it became necessary to do so in order properly to switch its cars at the terminal, the court presumed that it was intended that the company should have that privilege.—Shelbyville v. the consent of the municipal authorities and of the property owners on the streets affected has been obtained;⁷⁶ but there must be a reasonable necessity for the departure.⁷⁷ Where the franchise of a street railroad company gives it the right to construct connections, sidings, etc., for the housing and care of its cars in streets adjacent to a particular street, the word "adjacent" will not be construed to confine the right to construct connections to streets actually touching the street named where to do so would be to destroy the effect of the grant.⁷⁸

Necessity because of changed conditions. The right of a street railroad company to construct necessary switches, turnouts, or sidings, whether expressly conferred or implied as an incident to the right to construct the road, exists whether the need therefor is due to the original conditions or to changed conditions,⁷⁹ because if it were otherwise, it would be impossible for a railroad company to keep pace with the increasing demands of business and to accommodate the public.⁸⁰ The company cannot be said to have exhausted its own powers of development because the facilities first adopted and constructed, and then sufficient, turned out, later on, to be inadequate.⁸¹

§ 80. Additional or Double Tracks

A general charter power to construct a line of street railroad authorizes the construction of double tracks on the streets, provided consent therefor is obtained from the authorities of the municipality; but, where a company is entitled to lay only a single-track railroad, it will not be permitted to construct a double-track railroad under the guise of building switches.

A general charter power to construct a line of street railroad authorizes the construction of double tracks on the streets of a municipality, provided the authorities of such municipality consent that the streets may be so used.⁸² Where the right is given to build a double-track line, the building of a single-track line does not exhaust the power of the company, or forfeit its right to build an additional track, but it may do so whenever its necessities and business require it.⁸³ Where a company is entitled to lay only a single-track railroad, it will not be permitted to construct a double-track railroad under the guise of building switches,⁸⁴ and authority given by ordinance to construct necessary switches and turnouts does not authorize the construction of an additional track making a double-track line.⁸⁵

§ 81. Branches and Lateral Tracks

A street railroad, after securing the right to do so from the proper local authorities, as required by statute, may construct branches from its main line.

A street railroad, after securing the right to do so from the proper local authorities, as required by statute, may construct branches from its main line.⁸⁶ Where the location of a main route is ineffectual because it is different from that prescribed by statute, the location of a branch line must fall with it.⁸⁷ The right to construct branches given by charter when no time is fixed for doing so confers no power of indefinite location, without limit in duration of time, but only the power to select and occupy streets with branches within a reasonable time.⁸⁸

A street railroad company is not authorized to construct a track connecting its lines of road, unless its franchise grants such authority or the municipality has consented thereto.

§ 83. Extensions and New Lines; Completion of Lines

- a. Right to make extensions
- b. Duty to construct extensions
- c. Duty to complete line constructed in part

a. Right to Make Extensions

- (1) In general
- (2) Conditions precedent
- (3) Character

(1) In General

Subject to statutory limitations, a grant to a street railroad company by a municipality is valid where it authorizes the company to extend the line of its tracks or its charter routes, where no tracks have been laid; and an extension, when made according to law, is to be deemed and taken as a part of the original grant.

Subject to statutory limitations, such as the requirement of a certificate or finding of public convenience and necessity, discussed supra § 24 b, a grant to a street railroad company by a municipality is valid where it authorizes the company to extend the line of its tracks⁹² or its charter routes, where no tracks have been laid.⁹³ Such a grant cannot be made so as to authorize the extension of an ordinary steam railroad as a street railroad and invest it with all the powers of a street railroad company.⁹⁴ An extension, when made according to law, is to be deemed and taken as a part of the original grant.⁹⁵

An ordinance renewing a street railroad franchise in an entire street will be construed as a whole in determining whether it is limited in its operation to that part only of the street in which the company has already laid its tracks and is operating its cars, or extends to all the rights, privileges, and franchises granted by the original ordinance.⁹⁶ A company has no right to construct and operate an extension of its road on streets other than those designated by a statute conferring the right to make an extension, even with the consent of the local authorities.⁹⁷ Under a statute providing that a street railroad company organized to operate a street railroad in any city or incorporated town may, for the purpose of extending its railway beyond the limits thereof, locate its road upon any portion of a highway which is of a designated width, a railroad previously constructed upon a highway of less than such width may be legalized by the subsequent widening of the highway to the statutory width.⁹⁸

Injunction. A city solicitor cannot predicate an action for an injunction against the extension by the city of a street railroad franchise, on an anticipated injury to abutting owners.⁹⁹

(2) Conditions Precedent

Any condition precedent imposed by the statute authorizing the extension of the lines of a street railroad company must be complied with; but, where there is a compliance with all conditions, the company is immediately invested with an exclusive privilege in the streets covered by the extension.

Any conditions precedent imposed by the statute authorizing the extension of the lines of a street railroad company must be complied with,¹ such, for instance, as filing in the office of the secretary of state an exemplification of the record of the adoption of the extension,² filing in such office of a description of the route of the extension, showing the termini, with a map exhibiting them,³ filing a map of the proposed route of the extension with the local authorities,⁴ obtaining the consent of the local authorities,⁵ obtaining approval by the local authorities of the plan of the proposed extension,⁶ agreeing that a proposed extension on a street will not be the occasion of the abandonment of its tracks already laid down upon another section of that street,⁷ and commencing construction within the prescribed time.⁸

Where, however, there is a compliance with all the conditions, the company is immediately invested with an exclusive privilege in the streets covered by the extension,⁹ and a further provision that no right actually to construct the extension shall vest until after thirty days from the filing of such exemplification merely postpones the right to construct the extension for such thirty days.¹⁰ Where the consent of a city council and the street committee to the prosecution of the work of extending a street railroad has been given, and it appears that the only location for the line is the extension of a track which has been laid for years on the same street, the company will not be restrained from carrying on the work because the street committee has not in its official capacity defined and authorized the exact location of the tracks, since under the circumstances, there can be no doubt as to the proper location.¹¹

(3) Character

Unless the term is given a broader significance by statute, an extension of a street railway is a prolongation

of it from one of its termini to some other designated point, and, where some distance intervenes between the terminus of the road and the proposed road, the proposed road is not an extension.

Unless the term is given a broader significance by statute, an extension of a street railway is a prolongation of it from one of its termini to some other designated point,¹² and, where some distance intervenes between the terminus of the road and the proposed road, the proposed road is not an extension.¹³ So a street railroad company, whose articles contemplate a single, connected road, carrying from end to end for a single fare, cannot construct an independent line, not connected with its original line, under extension proceedings.¹⁴ However, a company is not restricted to a mere prolongation of existing lines but may extend its operation in any direction or upon any street or avenue provided additional lines are to be operated in connection with existing lines, under a statute providing that any corporation organized for the purpose of building or extending a street railroad or any of its branches on or along any street or avenue in any city, town, or village may do so on compliance with prescribed conditions.¹⁵

A branch built as a distinct line under a separate grant is not an extension or part of another line by reason of the fact that it uses the tracks of that line for a short distance,¹⁶ nor is it made so by a subsequent resolution of the city council which provides simply for a change of connection with the main line.¹⁷ Under general statutory authority to construct extensions, it has been held that an extension much longer than the original line may be made, and that this is insufficient of itself to constitute a "new road" and not an "extension,"¹⁸ and,

by reason of the particular wording of some statutes, it has been held permissible for the company to construct an extension longer than the existing line and, in effect, constituting a new system.¹⁹ Where a franchise ordinance authorizes and requires the extension of lines when the city limits are extended, and also authorizes the construction of either single or double tracks, the company may construct a single track along the part of the street controlled by the city when the corporate limits on only one side of the street are extended.²⁰

b. Duty to Construct Extensions

- (1) In general
- (2) Extensions which may be required
- (3) Enforcement of order for extension

(1) In General

The exercise of statutory authority to compel a street railroad company to construct an extension to its lines rests in the discretion of the municipal council. There must be a compliance with conditions precedent to the right to compel a street railroad company to extend its lines in accordance with the contract obligations of the company.

Subject to the requirement of public convenience and necessity, discussed supra § 22, the exercise of statutory authority to compel a street railroad company to construct an extension to its lines rests in the discretion of the municipal council,²¹ but in this respect the council must act reasonably.²² A city and a street railroad company may contract with respect to an extension of lines.²³

Conditional order. It is not permissible to make an order conditioned on the happening of a fact in the future.²⁴

Conditions precedent to the right to compel a street railroad company to extend its lines in accordance with the contract obligations of the company must be complied with;²⁵ but a substantial compliance will be sufficient to satisfy this requirement.²⁶

Duty of successor to complete extension. A street railway company which succeeds to the rights, franchises, and obligations of another stands in the shoes of the latter with respect to its duty to complete and operate a railway extension begun by the former under a plan approved by the municipal authorities.²⁷

Proceedings by regulatory commission. Under some statutes, proceedings may be entertained by a regulatory commission to compel a street railroad company to extend its transportation system,²⁸ but some such provisions are not self-executing, and the order of the commission is not effective to require the company to extend its lines unless or until franchises therefor are issued by the cities concerned, as discussed infra subdivision b (2) of this section.

(2) Extensions Which May Be Required

A street railroad company may be bound by the terms of its franchise to construct an extension of its line to points outside the city, but ordinarily such a company cannot be compelled to extend its line into any new territory in which it has no franchise to operate, nor can it be compelled to construct and operate an extension which would not be remunerative.

Where the franchise as accepted by the company provides for the extension of the line to points outside the city, it is binding on the company to construct such extension,²⁹ which duty may be enforced

Issues

In proceeding to compel street railroad to furnish additional service to suburban communities in which motor coach company operated, motor coach company could not raise issue that operation of feeder bus line by street railroad would be ultra vires street railroad's charter.—Illinois Commerce Commission v. Chicago Rys. Co., 1 N.E.2d 65, 362 Ill. 559.

29. S.C.—Thomas v. Spartanburg Ry., Gas & Electric Co., 103 S.E. 149, 114 S.C. 74. 60 C.J. p 226 note 33.

by the city by an action for specific performance, as discussed infra subdivision b (3) of this section. Power reserved to the common council to order an extension of any present or future lines of railway upon any and all streets of a city is not limited to extensions on streets or part of streets not provided with any car service, but authorizes the extension of the car service of one line to or into the business or central part of the city, over streets or parts of streets upon which there is an existing track upon which the cars of another line are already operated.³⁰ In ordering a new line, the city does not exceed its authority in requiring that it conform to the general system already adopted by the company;³¹ and, in consequence, where the company has adopted a system of double tracks under its franchise, the city in ordering extensions may require the company to adopt the double-track system for its extensions.³²

Unremunerative extension. Where the charter of a street railroad company simply authorizes it to construct and maintain a railroad to a certain point, without requiring it to do so, it cannot be compelled to extend and maintain its road to that point if it would not be remunerative,³³ although the extension is greatly needed and although there is an urgent public demand for it.³⁴ Even though the franchise reserves to the city granting it the right to require extensions, in proceedings to compel such extension, it is error to exclude evidence offered by the company to show the effect on its financial condition and earnings, of requiring the proposed extension, and the unreasonableness and invalidity of the ordinance providing therefor.³⁵

Where permission is given to construct a street railroad on condition that it construct an extension when the construction and operation thereof could be done without loss, the company cannot be compelled to construct the extension except in accordance with the terms of the ordinance, although the necessary consent of the property holders to the building of the road was accompanied by a request that the ordinance require the extension immediately.³⁶ Under a statute requiring the extension of streetcar lines on a finding by the commission that public convenience and necessity demanded it and that the company's earning power would not thereby be impaired, the commission is not empowered to order the extension on a finding of public convenience and necessity and that the company's earning power would not thereby be impaired if the city would relieve the company from the cost of constructing pavement within the track zone.³⁷

Extensions into territory in which company has no franchise to operate. A street railroad company cannot be compelled to extend its line into any new territory in which it has no franchise to operate, by any state agency, whether it be a municipality,³⁸ or a state railroad or public service commission.³⁹ So a statute which attempts to confer jurisdiction on a railroad commission to order a street railroad company to extend its line into new territory in which it has no franchise is void and ineffective.⁴⁰

Extensions requiring municipal consent. A public service commission has no power to compel a company to build extensions where its charter merely permits it to do so on obtaining municipal consent and where it has taken no steps to obtain such consent.⁴¹ So it has been held that provisions that a street railroad corporation shall extend its lines on a finding by the commission that public convenience and necessity require such extension are not self-executing, and, therefore, that the commission's finding and its order are not effective to require extension of lines unless or until franchises therefor are issued by the cities concerned.⁴²

(3) Enforcement of Order for Extension

A contractual duty to construct an extension may be enforced by an action for specific performance, but where the ordinance merely provides that on noncompliance with an order to construct new lines and extensions the city may grant the right to other companies, the city cannot compel a street railroad company to construct new lines or extensions or forfeit its charter rights for failure to do so.

Where the franchise as accepted by the company provides for certain extensions of its line, the city may enforce the duty of the company by an action for specific performance.⁴³ Where an ordinance granting a franchise to a street railroad company reserves the right to require construction of new lines and extensions on notice to do so within a time designated by the council, and provides that, on noncompliance therewith, the council may grant the right to any other company to construct new lines in the streets designated, the city cannot compel the company to construct new lines or extensions or forfeit its charter rights for failure to do so.⁴⁴ The sole remedy on failure to construct the new lines or make the extensions is to grant to some other company the right to maintain street cars upon those streets with respect to which extensions or new lines had been ordered.⁴⁵ Under such an ordinance, an order must be made fixing the time within which the construction of the new lines or extensions must be completed before the right to construct such lines or extensions may be granted to another company.⁴⁶

Where a street railroad operating under a franchise requiring it to construct a line between two designated points constructs a part of its line but stops short of one of the terminal points, it may be compelled to complete construction of the line in accordance with the requirements of the franchise.

Where a street railroad operating under a franchise requiring it to construct a line between two designated points constructs a part of its line but

stops short of one of the terminal points, it cannot successfully defend proceedings to compel it to complete construction of the line in accordance with the requirements of the franchise on the ground that to do so would not be financially profitable.⁴⁷ Likewise, the company will not be permitted to say that because the necessity was not obvious at the time it could stop short of the terminal point, and that, when the necessity is shown to exist, it cannot be compelled to carry out the terms of its franchise.⁴⁸ Public necessity and convenience, and not private advantage, control.⁴⁹ So also the fact that the public authorities acquiesced in the termination of a street railroad line short of the terminus specified in the franchise did not constitute a practical construction thereof, relieving the railroad company from continuing the line,⁵⁰ and having accepted its franchise and built a substantial portion of its route, it is estopped thereafter to claim that it is under no legal obligation to complete the line,⁵¹ and the right of the public to compel completion of the line is not affected by delay of public officers in compelling the company to do so.⁵²

§ 84. Structures in or Over Streets

A surface railroad has no right to place structures in the streets except where such right is expressly conferred or arises by necessary implication from the grant of other rights. Elevated street railroad companies have the right to erect and maintain stations along their established routes where such right is expressly or impliedly granted.

street railroads,⁵⁵ in the absence of a statute providing otherwise.⁵⁶ If the right to build elevated stations exists, they may be built only upon streets within the route designated.⁵⁷ Where an elevated railroad company accepts the specifications of commissioners appointed to decide on routes, elevated structures, etc., their rights are determined and limited by such specifications, and, in the absence of legislative authority, can erect no bridges and platforms other than those built with the approval of the commissioners and included in the specifications;⁵⁸ and, where the statute does not expressly authorize additions to original elevated structures, the building of additions is not legal as incidental to the franchise because necessary, where the public could use the original structures without unduly impeding ordinary traffic.⁵⁹

E. RIGHTS IN, AND USE OF, BRIDGES, TURNPIKES, AND TOLL ROADS

§ 85. Bridges

Generally, a street railroad company may construct and operate its road over any bridge in the street or highway, whether the bridge is owned by the public, or by a private corporation authorized to demand tolls for passage over it; but it is a limitation on such right that the use by the street railroad must be compatible with the use by the general public of the bridge, and the right is also subject to the right of the public authorities to improve the bridge in accordance with the public interests.

Since a public bridge is a part of the highway which passes over it, as discussed in Bridges § 3, where the right is conferred on a street railroad company to construct and operate a street railroad on a street or highway, it may, subject to requirements as to obtaining the consent of local authorities, discussed supra § 38, or property owners,⁶⁰ and the performance of conditions imposed, discussed supra § 33 b (2), construct and operate its road over any bridge in the street or highway whether then existing⁶¹ or which may be thereafter constructed in such street or highway as an integral part thereof.⁶² This rule ordinarily applies whether the bridge is owned by the public,⁶³ or by a private corporation authorized to demand tolls for passage over it;⁶⁴ and, where a bridge company, which is authorized to construct a bridge between two cities for ordinary travel, induces streetcar companies subsequently organized to spend large sums in building to and over such bridge, and then allows the use of the bridge for a great length of time, it cannot deny the right to such use on payment of a reasonable toll.⁶⁵

Nevertheless, the primary user of the bridge, when the right of a street railroad company to use the bridge exists, is in the public, and the easement of the company is somewhat servient to the public user.⁶⁶ So it is a well-defined limitation on the right to construct and operate street railroads on public bridges that the use must be compatible with use by the general public of the bridge;⁶⁷ and a street railroad cannot lawfully construct and operate its line over a bridge, when to do so will render it unsafe for public travel,⁶⁸ or exclude the public partially or wholly from the use of the bridge.⁶⁹ If the bridge is either of insufficient strength or of insufficient capacity to accommodate the general public travel and also the company's cars, and cannot be so strengthened or enlarged as to do so, neither the city nor the county at large is bound to provide the company with a suitable viaduct or other means of crossing at the point where the bridge is situated.⁷⁰

The right of a street railway company to operate its lines over a bridge is subject to the right of the public authorities to improve the bridge in accordance with the public interests.⁷¹ So, the right to operate cars over a bridge is subject to the right of the municipality owning it temporarily to interrupt such use for the purpose of making needful repairs and improvements as from time to time may be necessary,⁷² and this is true, although a serious interruption to the use of the railroad may be thereby rendered unavoidable.⁷³

Termination of contractual right to use bridge. An agreement between a street railway company and a county relating to the manner of use of a county bridge and the rental to be paid for the franchise terminates with the lawful demolition of the bridge by the county, and does not give rise to any rights on the part of the railway company in a new bridge thereafter built by the county.⁷⁴ Under the provisions of some local statutes, a contract between the municipality and a street railroad company for the operation of cars over a bridge gives merely a license so to operate cars subject to change in its terms or even total abrogation if the public interests should so require.⁷⁵

Determination of number of tracks. The legislature may determine the number of tracks to be laid across a bridge,⁷⁶ and may delegate this power to a public utilities commission, this being an adjudication of a matter of administrative character.⁷⁷ The commission must accord a hearing to the parties in interest;⁷⁸ but inasmuch as the order relating to the number of tracks to be laid and the kind of rails to be used is administrative in character, the order will not be disturbed unless it is unreasonable.⁷⁹

Guaranteeing payment of bridge company's bonds. Unless authorized to do so by the terms of its charter, a street railroad company is without authority to guarantee payment of bonds of a bridge company over which its road is constructed,⁸⁰ and, in the absence of such authority, and of any consideration for the guaranty, the holder of the bonds cannot recover from the railroad company interest on the bonds which the bridge company had failed to pay.⁸¹

§ 86. Turnpikes and Toll Roads

Street railroad companies may be authorized to contract with turnpike companies for the use of their roads for the construction and operation of street railroads, but such companies must nevertheless comply with statutory conditions precedent before using a turnpike for a street railroad line.

The charters of some street railroad companies expressly authorize them to contract with turnpike companies for the use of their roads for the construction and operation of street railroads,⁸² and the charters of some turnpike companies authorize them to grant the right to street railroad companies to construct and operate street railroads on the roads of the turnpike company.⁸³ In some decisions where no express statutory authorization for contracts of this kind was mentioned, their validity has been assumed,⁸⁴ and it has been held that such contracts are binding and govern the rights of the parties.⁸⁵ So, in the absence of such contract, a street railroad company may obtain the use of such a road by condemnation proceedings.⁸⁶ It has also been held that a turnpike company, standing by while a street railway company was extending and double-tracking its road with the consent of the borough, will be presumed to have consented thereto, and is estopped to deny consent.⁸⁷ However, the right of a street railroad company to construct and operate its road on a turnpike, whether created by agreement or otherwise, does not do away with the necessity of its complying with statutory conditions precedent,⁸⁸ such, for instance, as obtaining the consent of the local authorities, as discussed supra § 39, or of abutting property owners, supra § 73.

F. DURATION, EXTENSION, RENEWAL, REVOCATION, SURRENDER, AND FORFEITURE OF FRANCHISE OR GRANT; USURPATION OF FRANCHISE

§ 87. Duration and Termination in General

- a. In general
- b. Effect of expiration of franchise

a. In General

The duration of a franchise to a street railroad company depends on the language of the grant and the extent of the interest which the grantor had authority to convey. If the grant contains a limitation as to time, it terminates at the expiration of the period designated, but a grant which contains no limitation as to time ordinarily is construed as a grant in perpetuity.

The duration of a franchise to a street railroad company depends on the language of the grant and the extent of the interest which the grantor had authority to convey.⁸⁹ If the grant contains a limitation as to time, it terminates at the expiration of the period designated.⁹⁰ The courts have very generally held in accordance with principles governing franchises generally that a grant by city or county authorities of a franchise to a street railroad company which contains no limitation as to time is a grant in perpetuity, unless otherwise limited by organic or general statutory law or by the charter of the municipality making the grant;⁹¹ and this is the rule, especially where the grant is not only unlimited as to duration, but contains a power of assignment.⁹² However, a grant of a franchise by a municipality for an indefinite term, the consideration for which was not only the service to be rendered the general public, but also obligations to be discharged to the municipality itself, as such, terminates when the municipality ceases to exist.⁹³

To whose benefit grant inures. A grant in perpetuity for the purpose of a street railroad may be exercised in perpetuity not only by the grantee, but by those who may lawfully succeed to its rights.⁹⁴

Grant for longer period than statutory limit. Where the term for which a franchise may be granted is limited by statute, a grant for a longer time will be sustained for the statutory term.⁹⁵

Limitation by corporate life of grantee. A grant of a franchise to a street railroad company,⁹⁶ or to a street railroad company, its successors, and assigns,⁹⁷ for a definite term, extending beyond the corporate life of the company, is valid and does not terminate with the ending of the corporate life of the company, and, if then owned by it, it may constitute an asset divisible among the stockholders

after the payment of debts.⁹⁸ On the other hand, the grant of a franchise to a street railroad company, and its successors, for the term of their charter, expires when the original charter of the company expires.⁹⁹ So, it has been held that, where a franchise was granted to a company "during the time of its charter," the fact that the corporate existence of the company was subsequently extended by the amendment of its articles does not result in an extension of the franchise;¹ but, where a franchise was granted for the life of the corporation's charter and for such time as the charter might be extended by renewals, the franchise does not expire at the time when the corporation's charter would have expired if it had not been extended.²

On the expiration of a franchise granted by a municipality to a street railway company, the contractual relation between the parties is at an end; all rights in the company to occupy the city streets and maintain and operate a street railway thereon are terminated, in the absence of another grant of authority; and the city may require the company to remove its property from the streets within a reasonable time, or impose such terms as it may see fit for the further use of the streets.

On the expiration of a franchise granted by a municipality to a street railway company, the contractual relation between the parties is at an end;³ all rights in the company to occupy the city streets and maintain and operate a street railway thereon are terminated,⁴ in the absence of another grant of authority;⁵ and the city may impose such terms as it may see fit for the further use of the streets, although they do not become operative without acceptance by the railroad company.⁶ The relation

existing between a city and a street railway company after the expiration of its franchise is not that of a landlord to a tenant holding over;⁷ and the city has the absolute and unquestioned right at any time to compel the company to vacate the streets on which the franchise has expired,⁸ and, if necessary for that purpose, to enforce its rights by a writ of assistance.⁹

While it has been held that a street railroad company operating on the public streets after the expiration of its franchise does not, by so doing, create a nuisance,¹⁰ but it is to be regarded as committing a continuing trespass,¹¹ it has been held, on the contrary, that a corporation which is a consolidation of several independent street railroad companies operating under separate franchises expiring at different dates is not, after the expiration of the franchises of the various constituent companies, a trespasser until it is forbidden to continue by positive action of the city authorities.¹² After expiration of the franchise, the company cannot enjoin the city from granting a similar franchise to another company.¹³

Ownership and disposition of property. After expiration of the franchise, the property in the streets used in the maintenance and operation of the railroad belongs to the company,¹⁴ in the absence of any provision to the contrary in the franchise;¹⁵ the city has no right to take possession thereof,¹⁶ and an ordinance granting it to another company on payment to the owner of a sum to be adjudicated as its value is void as depriving the owner of its property without due process of law.¹⁷ While the city may require the company to remove its property from the street within a reasonable time,¹⁸ it has no arbitrary power to proceed at once by force to effect such removal.¹⁹ It has also been held that a railway company operating its railroad after the expiration of its franchise, with the consent of the city, and making and incurring large expense in paving, etc., should be given a full two years as a reasonable time within which to negotiate for an extension of its franchise, or to dispose of its property.²⁰

Laches. In an action to oust a street railway company from the streets of a city because it was operating after the expiration of its franchise, the doctrine of laches does not apply, except as it may be considered in determining the final order which should be made.²¹

Waiver and estoppel. Day to day arrangements by which continued operation of a street railway was permitted, notwithstanding the expiration of the franchise rights, but which expressly provided that the permits thereby granted might be revoked, and that action thereunder should not waive the rights of either party, give the railway company no property rights in the streets of the city.²² A city is not estopped to insist on the expiration of franchises to a street railway company by the inaction of its officials while the company was expending large sums of money in betterments and replacements instead of ordinary repairs, where it had no right to prevent the company from making improvements or to require them to be made.²³ So, after expiration of its franchise, the company cannot acquire new franchise rights by estoppel against the city through the expenditure, with its knowledge, of large sums on its railway, where the state constitution forbids the city to grant franchises not revocable at its will unless authorized by a popular vote.²⁴

§ 88. Extensions and Renewals

- a. In general
- b. Implied extension or renewal

a. In General

It is competent for a municipal corporation, under legislative authority, to grant a renewal, even before expiration of the franchise, for a term within the limit prescribed by statute, provided the company is not released from any obligation or liability under the old grant, and the renewal will, in the opinion of the municipal council, prove beneficial to the public; and suitable reservations and conditions may be imposed as a consideration therefor.

by its acts and conduct recognizes the right of the company to use the streets, it may not claim that no franchise was granted by a renewal ordinance.³³

Consideration. The continued operation of a street railroad constitutes a sufficient consideration for an ordinance extending the date for the expiration of its franchise.³⁴

Acceptance. Acceptance by a street railway company of an amendatory ordinance, extending its franchise, may be presumed from the fact that the amendment was beneficial to it, and from the fact that it issued bonds which are to fall due at the expiration of the extension.³⁵

Contractual provision for renewal and revaluation. Where a franchise was granted for a specified term of years with privilege of renewal for an additional specified period on a fair revaluation of the franchise, an absolute right to renew is thereby granted.³⁶

Where the statute prescribes the manner in which, and officials by whom, renewal of a street railroad franchise may be made, it cannot be implied from the acts of other officials; nor will a renewal of a franchise be implied from permission granted the company to extend its tracks and operate them in connection with the main line for a period which endures longer than the right to operate the main line.

Where the statute prescribes the manner in which, and officials by whom, renewal of a street railroad franchise may be made, it cannot be implied from the acts of other officials;³⁷ nor will a renewal of the franchise be implied from permission granted the company to extend its tracks and operate them in connection with the main line for a period which endures longer than the right to operate the main line,³⁸ or from a consolidation with another company,³⁹ unless it is provided that the rights of the company having the shorter franchise shall terminate with the franchise of the other company.⁴⁰ However, ordinances granting an extension to a consolidated street railway corporation, possessing franchises expiring at different times, on conditions involving great expense to the corporation and resulting in substantial benefits to the public as to transfers for single fares, and relating to the entire system as well as the extensions granted, and providing that the right granted shall terminate with the then existing grants of the main line at a specified date later than that of termination of some of the franchises, amount, on the acceptance by the company and compliance with the conditions, to a contract within the protection of the impairment clause of the constitution extending the various franchises to that date.⁴¹

The right to operate street railroads under a municipal ordinance, confirmed by statute, until the city should exercise its reserved right to purchase, is confined to the streets designated in the original ordinance and in such other later ordinances as indicate a purpose to preserve the permission of the original ordinance, and does not, by reason of the unity of the street railway system, extend to the rights of occupancy acquired in other streets, so as to continue such rights until purchase is made of the entire system.⁴² So, it has been held that the life of a street railway franchise granted by a city and an adjoining township for a fixed term is not extended until the date fixed by the township for the termination of other street railway franchises, by the adoption of a municipal ordinance, after the annexation of a part of the township to the city, requiring the street railway company for the full term of such township grants to sell workmen's tickets at a reduced rate, other provisions of the township grants to remain unchanged.⁴³ Where a city after the franchise of some of the lines of a street railway company have expired passes an ordinance to continue in force for a year unless sooner repealed, with penalties for its violation, for continued operation of the company's system, with fares and transfers over the various lines, whether or not having a franchise, this amounts to a grant to the company for further operation of the system, during the life of the ordinance.⁴⁴

Statute extending corporate life of grantee does not extend the term of a grant by a municipality limited in time.⁴⁵

Branch lines. A franchise of a distinct branch line made to terminate with the grant to the main line is to be measured by the grant as it then exists, and not by any subsequent extension of time which might be granted the main line.⁴⁶ An extension of the time for the termination of the franchise of a branch line to the date set for the termination of the main line is not effected by a municipal ordinance consenting to a consolidation of several street railroads, including the lines in question, on condition that but one fare shall be charged for a continuous ride.⁴⁷

§ 89. Revocation

In the absence of provisions in the constitution or a statute establishing a different rule, a franchise or grant to a street railroad company by the legislature or a municipality acting under delegated authority, when accepted and acted on by the company, is not a mere license, but a valid contract, the obligation of which neither party can impair, and the granting authority is without power to revoke it without the consent of the company, unless power to revoke is reserved in the franchise or grant.

In the absence of provisions in the constitution or a statute establishing a different rule,⁴⁸ a franchise or grant to a street railroad company by the legislature or a municipality acting under delegated authority, when accepted and acted on by the company, is not a mere license, but a valid contract, the obligation of which neither party can impair, and the granting authority is without power to revoke it without the consent of the company, unless power to revoke is reserved in the franchise or grant.⁴⁹ The contract thus made is binding not only on a municipality making the grant, but also on a municipality which subsequently annexes it.⁵⁰ It has been held, however, that consent to occupy a highway may be revoked before the company has acquired a vested right by commencing construction and making expenditures.⁵¹ A mere license to construct a street railroad siding, although lawful in its origin, is a revocable privilege,⁵² and, on revocation by the proper authorities, its force is spent.⁵³ In the absence of a franchise right to the contrary, the municipality may require the removal of streetcar tracks from its streets.⁵⁴

Unauthorized franchise. Where a street railway operates under a franchise which the municipality was without power to grant, the grant is nothing more than a mere license revocable at pleasure, and the tracks are subject to removal as a nuisance at the suit of the city or state;⁵⁵ and it has been held that consent to the construction of a street railroad by a local agency, such as a county fiscal court, having no power to give consent, is a nullity, and an order revoking the attempted grant of the privilege does not change the status of the parties.⁵⁶

Methods of revocation. Revocation may be implied as well as expressed,⁵⁷ and the intent to revoke a franchise is plainly evinced by the granting of a second street railroad franchise over the same route to others.⁵⁸ It has been held, however, that an ordinance providing that a single track may be laid in any given street is not in any sense repealed by a subsequent ordinance authorizing the laying of double tracks in all streets where single tracks had been laid.⁵⁹

Protection of right of company on unauthorized revocation. Where a municipality annuls its license, and thus its grant to a street railroad company, and attempts by force to prevent the completion of the road then in construction, an injunction will issue restraining the city from such a proceeding.⁶⁰ Where consent to lay double tracks has been obtained from a municipality, it cannot take away the right by subsequent amendment of the ordinance granting the right after large sums have been expended in constructing the railroad.⁶¹

In Massachusetts. The courts have adjudicated numerous particular matters with respect to the exercise of the power of revocation.⁶² Generally, street railroads hold their locations in public ways under a tenure no more secure than a privilege or permit subject to revocation,⁶³ and, accordingly, such locations ordinarily are subject to revocation without compensation by the particular authority and in the manner prescribed by law when further continuance is no longer compatible with the public interest.⁶⁴ Under a statute detailing the authority of the department of public works with respect to street railroads, the power to revoke locations on state highways is subject to a finding of public necessity and convenience, to the requirement of public notice and a hearing, and, unless the company consents in writing within the specified time, to ultimate decision by the department;⁶⁵ and in order to exercise the powers conferred by the statute, the department should follow the prescribed procedure instead of negotiating a contract for the payment of money for the locations.⁶⁶ Effect will be given to the specific provisions of a particular statute prohibiting the revocation of locations of a certain company,⁶⁷ and such a statute constitutes a contract between the commonwealth and the company, binding the commonwealth not to revoke the location by a mere repeal of the grant at the pleasure of the legislature.⁶⁸ Accordingly, a later statute purporting to terminate the right of the street railroad to operate at a certain location cannot validly be given effect as a revocation of the location without compensation.⁶⁹ A statute purporting,

The issue as to whether locations for street railroads are to be revoked is determined broadly from the standpoint of the public interest in the service, and not from the standpoint of reimbursement for loss.—

Boston, W. & N. Y. St. Ry. Co. v. Commonwealth, supra.

Legislative intent to authorize payment of public money to end street railway locations without investigation as to necessity or hearing, where locations could be brought to an end through ordinary methods of public necessity and convenience if public necessity and convenience in the use of the public ways so require for any good and sufficient reason, without payment of any money, is not to be lightly inferred but must be manifested by some clear indication of legislative purpose.—Boston, W. & N. Y. St. Ry. Co. v. Commonwealth, supra.

Specific exceptions

Under statute providing that the locations of, or right to maintain, any elevated lines or structures of an elevated railway company should not be subject to revocation, the specific exceptions to the prohibitions of revocation amount to reservations of the right to exercise the power of eminent domain and of the right to purchase from the company its railroad and all its franchises, properties, rights, and privileges by paying therefor an amount fixed by the statute.—Boston Elevated Ry. Co. v. Commonwealth, supra.

68. Mass.—Boston Elevated Ry. Co. v. Commonwealth, supra.

Objections

A statutory contract whereby the legislature agreed that a particular location of an elevated railway company should not be revoked without payment of compensation is not subject to objection that the power of eminent domain was bargained away, even without an express reservation of that power, since the state cannot divest itself of that power, and a reservation of the power would be implied.—Boston Elevated Ry. Co. v. Commonwealth, supra.

69. Mass.—Boston Elevated Ry. Co. v. Commonwealth, supra.

"Police power"

Revocation of locations purportedly made by a subsequent statute cannot be sustained as an exercise of the "police power" under the guise of regulating the use of the streets on ground of expediency in the interest of the general welfare in absence subject to judicial review, to revoke a street railroad location should, if reasonably possible, be interpreted so as to effectuate the purpose of the statute and so as not to render it contrary to the terms of the constitution.⁷⁰

§ 90. Surrender

The franchise of a street railroad company can be extinguished by a surrender thereof to some body having authority to accept the surrender, and by its acceptance thereof, or by abandonment or nonuser for so long a period that a surrender and acceptance will be presumed.

The franchise of a street railroad company can be extinguished by a surrender thereof to some body having authority to accept the surrender, and by its acceptance thereof,⁷¹ or by abandonment or nonuser for so long a period that a surrender and acceptance will be presumed.⁷² Where, by charter, the mayor and city council are vested with absolute control of the franchises of the city, they may accept a surrender of any street railway franchises granted by the city, in the absence of an express provision in the charter forbidding it.⁷³ Under some statutes, the surrender may be accepted by a designated court.⁷⁴ The effect of the surrender is that the franchise contract is no longer binding on the company in favor of the city or state in which it operates.⁷⁵

Forfeitures of street railroad grants are not favored, and the courts will proceed with great caution in proceedings therefor, but, where the parties have by lawful contract provided for a forfeiture, the courts will enforce the agreement, and considerations of hardship resulting therefrom cannot be invoked to prevent such enforcement when insisted on by the state.

Although the grant itself is strictly construed against a street railroad company, as discussed supra § 71, forfeitures thereof are not favored,⁷⁶ and the courts will proceed with great caution in proceedings therefor,⁷⁷ and will not enforce them in doubtful cases.⁷⁸ However, where the parties to a street railroad franchise have by lawful contract expressly or impliedly provided for a forfeiture, the courts will enforce the agreement,⁷⁹ notwithstanding the street railroad company is under management and control of public trustees;⁸⁰ and considerations of hardship resulting from enforcement of a condition by forfeiture of the grant for noncompliance therewith cannot be invoked to prevent such enforcement when insisted on by the state.⁸¹

Provisions for forfeiture are strictly construed against the party for whose benefit they are provided.⁸² The party seeking the forfeiture must show a literal compliance with the provisions which give the right to a forfeiture.⁸³ The conduct which is claimed to constitute the forfeiture of corporate rights and franchises is to have a charitable and liberal construction, like any conduct tending to penal consequences.⁸⁴ It has been held, however, that a statute purporting, subject to judicial review, to revoke a street railroad location, and to declare a forfeiture thereof, should, if it is reasonably possible, be interpreted so as to effectuate the purpose of the statute and so as not to render it contrary to the terms of the constitution.⁸⁵

some statutes, a street railroad company is authorized to file a petition in equity to determine whether there was just cause for statutory revocation and declaration of forfeiture of the company's right to operate certain lines, and the court is vested with jurisdiction to enter a decree giving effect to its decision on those issues.⁸⁶ Such a suit is restricted to the issues provided for,⁸⁷ that is, whether, on the facts appearing in the record, the revocation and declaration of forfeiture impaired the company's constitutional rights,⁸⁸ and the suit does not involve, unless incidentally, either the company's general franchise to be a corporation or its subordinate franchise to manage and carry on its corporate business.⁸⁹ The court is required to decide the mixed question of fact and law, whether on the facts agreed and the proper inferences therefrom there was a breach of a material condition of the grant of the location constituting a cause sufficient in law for a declaration of forfeiture.⁹⁰

Grounds for forfeiture of a street railroad grant or franchise may be expressly provided for therein or by general statute, or may exist independently of such provisions or statutes, since a franchise may be forfeited on conditions broken; but the grounds for forfeiture must be of a substantial character, and forfeiture is not warranted where there has been a substantial performance of conditions imposed.

Grounds for forfeiture of a street railroad grant or franchise may be expressly provided for therein⁹¹ or by general statute,⁹² or may exist independently of such provisions or statutes,⁹³ since, like other contracts, a franchise may be forfeited on conditions broken.⁹⁴ Nevertheless, it is not every nonperformance of the conditions imposed, or every misuser, which will work a forfeiture.⁹⁵ The grounds for forfeiture must be of a substantial character,⁹⁶ especially where the franchise can be forfeited only as a whole.⁹⁷ Substantial performance of conditions imposed is all that is required.⁹⁸

The unauthorized carriage of freight,⁹⁹ and the charging of excessive fares,¹ are not grounds of forfeiture but merely an occasion for the regulation of the company's business.

Arbitration clause. Where an ordinance giving a street railroad company the right to use a street contains no clause of forfeiture, an agreement of the company with the mayor, at the time of signing the ordinance, to arbitrate any difficulty with another street railroad company seeking to use the street, does not give the city the right to forfeit the franchise because its arbitrator is unable to agree with the second arbitrator in the choice of a third.²

b. Failure to Commence or Complete Construction within Time Prescribed

Failure to commence or complete construction within the time prescribed for so doing may constitute grounds for forfeiture of the franchise of a street railroad, when so declared by statute or where the franchise contains a provision therefor.

Failure to commence construction within the time prescribed for so doing is a ground for forfeiture of the franchise of a street railroad when so declared by statute.³ Also, failure to complete the construction of a railroad within the time limited by the grant is a ground for forfeiture of the company's franchise,⁴ unless excused, as discussed infra subdivision d of this section, or waived, infra § 93. Such matters constitute grounds for forfeiture especially where the franchise contains a provision therefor,⁵ or a forfeiture for breach of condition is provided for by general statute.⁶ In order to prevent a forfeiture for noncompletion within the time specified, there must be a substantially constructed track,⁷ and what constitutes such a track is a question of fact for the jury under all the facts of the case.⁸ The right of a street railway company, under its franchise, to connect its main line in a village with a branch line which it afterward built to the village boundary, has been held not to be forfeited by its failure to construct the branch within the time fixed for the completion and operation of its main line.⁹ A statute which extended the time for building railroads for two years, and provided that "failure by any railroad company to construct its road heretofore shall not cause a forfeiture of its corporate powers," does not apply to a railroad company which willfully and intentionally failed to construct its road when able to do so.¹⁰

c. Nonuser and Abandonment

Nonuser may constitute a ground for forfeiture of a street railroad franchise, especially where the franchise contains a provision for forfeiture for conditions broken; and abandonment of its right of way or tracks by a street railroad company, or use of such right of way for purposes other than that of a street railroad, also constitutes a ground for forfeiture.

Nonuser may constitute a ground for forfeiture of a street railroad franchise,¹¹ especially where the franchise contains a provision for forfeiture for conditions broken,¹² or where, in addition thereto, there is some act of abandonment.¹³ Such ground of forfeiture may be enforced notwithstanding a contractual provision prohibiting revocation of a location granted to a railway company embodied in the statute granting the location.¹⁴ It has been held, however, that in order to warrant a forfeiture for nonuser it must have existed for such a length of time, or under such circumstances, that a surrender of the franchise and its acceptance may be presumed;¹⁵ and that, if the period of nonuser which will give a right of forfeiture is fixed by statute,¹⁶ or by contract with the municipality,¹⁷ mere nonuser for a shorter period is not a ground for forfeiture. A company which has the right to lay and operate a double track does not forfeit its right to do so by laying a single track for a time;¹⁸ and the fact that a company having the right under its charter to operate two tracks removed one of the tracks during a period when a single track sufficed for its business does not forfeit by nonuser its right to relay the track removed.¹⁹

Abandonment or change of use. Abandonment of its right of way²⁰ or tracks²¹ by a street railroad company, or use of such right of way for purposes other than that of a street railroad,²² constitutes a ground for forfeiture. Nevertheless, in order to constitute abandonment there must be a clear, unequivocal, and decisive act on the part of the company showing a determination not to use the rights granted.²³ An agreement between a municipality and a street railroad company for the postponement of the laying of the company's tracks for a designated time does not constitute an abandonment of the right of the company to build, but merely a postponement of the right.²⁴

d. Excuses for Nonperformance

In order to avoid forfeiture the company is bound to perform in accordance with the terms of the franchise, unless performance is rendered impossible by act of God, by the law, or by the other party; and the company is not excused from the performance of the conditions imposed by reason of the fact that performance thereof has become burdensome, or because of its financial inability to perform.

It has been stated in general terms that in order to avoid forfeiture the company is bound to perform in accordance with the terms of the franchise, unless performance is rendered impossible by act of God, by the law, or by the other party.²⁵ The company is not excused from performance of the conditions imposed by reason of the fact that performance thereof has become burdensome,²⁶ or because of its financial inability to perform,²⁷ or because it was impossible in a business sense to go ahead with the work,²⁸ or because the road would not have been profitable.²⁹ Also, the fact that the company was prohibited by statute from building one of its lines is no reason for not forfeiting its franchise therefor where it appears that, when the law was passed, the company had been in default for five years.³⁰ The company is not excused from performance because of failure to obtain consent of a plank road company, over whose road the track was to be laid, where it was not shown that it had used reasonable efforts and due diligence to obtain the consent.³¹

Nonuser has been held not to be excused by the fact that the city has passed an ordinance attempting to repeal the franchises granted to the company,³² or by the fact that the city has prevented the company from laying a small portion of its track, where, had it not interfered, the road could not have been operated without acquiring a right to use a portion of another company's track, which right could not be acquired.³³ So, also, where the grant is made on condition that one track is to be completed within a designated time except in case of delay by injunction, legal proceedings, or any cause beyond the control of the company, performance is not excused by reason of failure to obtain consent of property owners or a right of way through private property where it has a full legal right to force a right of way.³⁴

On the other hand, performance is excused where it is a legal impossibility because of the refusal of the property owners to consent to the construction required by the franchise, and where there are no legal means to compel consent.³⁵ It has also been held excused where performance was prevented by operation of law and the acts of the city authorities.³⁶ So it has been held that failure to complete construction within the time prescribed will not be permitted to work a forfeiture of the company's franchise where the delay was due to unforeseen circumstances, where the company had expended large sums of money and exercised due diligence in construction, and where the delay caused no pecuniary injury to the municipality or its inhabitants.³⁷

§ 93. — Waiver and Estoppel

The state or a municipality may waive performance of conditions imposed by it on granting a franchise or giving its consent to a street railroad company to construct and operate its road, and thereby avoid the forfeiture of the franchise for breach of such conditions; but a municipality has no power to waive a forfeiture arising from nonperformance of conditions imposed by the state, or contract away the power of the state to forfeit a franchise for breach of conditions.

The state may waive performance of conditions imposed by it in the grant of street railroad franchises, and thereby avoid the forfeiture of the franchise for breach of such condition.³⁸ So, also, a municipality may waive performance of conditions imposed by it on granting a franchise or giving its consent to a street railroad company to construct and operate its road in the streets of the municipality.³⁹ However, a municipality has no power to waive a forfeiture arising from nonperformance of conditions imposed by the state,⁴⁰ or contract away the power of the state to forfeit a franchise for breach of conditions.⁴¹

A waiver may be either express or implied.⁴² A waiver will be inferred from any act which unequivocally recognizes that the franchise is still existing and in force, after knowledge of the act of omission constituting a ground of forfeiture.⁴³ If such act of recognition has the effect of causing the holder of the franchise to incur expense which he would not have incurred had the forfeiture been insisted on, or otherwise to change his position, the inference of a waiver becomes conclusive on the ground of estoppel.⁴⁴ A waiver may also result from subsequent legislation, state or municipal,

Waiver negatived

The declaration of forfeiture in statute declaring forfeited railway company's right to operate elevated railway structure on a certain location served to define the attitude of the commonwealth by negativing waiver of the asserted breach of a condition of the grant and by insisting on forfeiture of the location by reason of the breach.—Boston Elevated Ry. Co. v. Commonwealth, 39 N.E.2d 87, 310 Mass. 528.

Possession by public trustees

A waiver by the commonwealth of an implied condition that the grant of a particular location to an elevated railway company should be used for the purpose for which it was granted could not be implied from fact that, under the Public Control Act and the contract between the company and the commonwealth embodied therein, public trustees had taken possession of location and structure thereon and were managing and operating company's properties.—*Boston Elevated Ry. recognizing the continued existence of the company.⁴⁵ It has been held, however, that the mere acceptance of a street railroad company's payment of franchise taxes by the administrative officers of a city is not a waiver of rights of the municipality to claim a forfeiture of the franchise for non-performance of its conditions.⁴⁶ Where a street railroad failed to build an extension, which was the condition of its obtaining the use of the streets, indulgence by the borough in commencing proceedings to compel removal of the tracks under a forfeiture clause does not give rise to an estoppel, where the delay has led to no change in the situation.⁴⁷ The waiver of a right of forfeiture does not amount to the granting of a new right.⁴⁸

§ 94. — Extent of Forfeiture

The extent of the forfeiture depends on the provisions of the franchise, and, where such provisions authorize only a forfeiture of the entire grant, the city has no authority to select such portion of the route as it sees fit and ask to have a forfeiture declared on it, but, if it is entitled to a forfeiture, it is for all.

The extent of the forfeiture depends on the provisions of the franchise.⁴⁹ Where the only provision in a franchise is for a forfeiture of the entire grant, the city has no authority to select such portion of the route as it sees fit and ask to have a forfeiture declared on it; if it is entitled to a forfeiture, it is for all.⁵⁰ Where a franchise to a company, whose line was intended by the parties to be built in sections as the territory to be served became settled, provided that on failure to construct any portion of the road on or before the dates specified "the right herein granted shall cease," failure to construct any separable portion of the line within the specified period works a forfeiture of the whole franchise.⁵¹ Where there was a breach of a condition of a grant of location that it be used for the purpose for which it was granted, the forfeiture extends to the entire location, including the part thereof situated on privately owned land, regardless of the rights retained in such land, since as far as the location was on privately owned land, it was incidental to the location in the public streets.⁵² Where a franchise was granted on condition that the company agreed to forfeit the road to the city in one year after ceasing to operate it, the word "forfeiture" does not signify a nonenforceable penalty or liquidated damages, but authorizes the court, on default of the conditions of the grant, to declare, in a proper action, an absolute forfeiture of the railway franchise, including rails, ties, roadbed, and things granted.⁵³ Where, however, the franchise provides that as much of the right of way as may not be occupied within a designated time shall be considered as abandoned, a forfeiture for noncompliance therewith is limited to as much of the right of way as is not occupied within the time designated, and does not extend to the completed portions of the road.⁵⁴

§ 95. — Persons Entitled to Assert

Ordinarily the state, and only the state, may institute proceedings for the forfeiture of a street railroad franchise, and private individuals or corporations cannot assert a forfeiture of the franchise of a street railroad corporation either in a direct or a collateral proceeding.

The state may institute proceedings for the forfeiture of a street railroad franchise,⁵⁵ or assert such forfeiture by legislative declaration, in a proper case.⁵⁶ Moreover, as a general rule, the state alone can institute such proceedings,⁵⁷ and this principle has been held applicable, although the franchise was granted by the municipality under delegated authority.⁵⁸ However, there are decisions in which the right of a municipality to maintain proceedings to forfeit a franchise granted by it is apparently recognized;⁵⁹ and some decisions hold that a municipality may institute forfeiture proceedings where the franchise granted by it expressly gives it the power to declare a forfeiture for non-fulfillment of the conditions on which the franchise was granted,⁶⁰ or where a statute provides that the action may be brought by any person claiming an interest adverse to the franchise.⁶¹ Private individuals or corporations ordinarily may not assert a forfeiture of the franchise of a street railroad corporation either in a direct or collateral proceeding.⁶² It has been held, however, that an exclusive right granted to a street railroad company to operate its line in a city is such a property right as will entitle it to raise by injunction the question of forfeiture of the charter of another company which is granted the right to build a street railroad in certain streets of the same city.⁶³ It has also been held that, where a city was threatening to forfeit the franchise of a street railroad company for default of the latter which had been in controversy between them for years, a mortgagee of the company having a property right affected was entitled to maintain a suit in equity analogous to a bill of interpleader against the city and company to require them to submit their controversy to the determination of the court.⁶⁴

§ 96. — Necessity for Judicial or Legislative Determination of Forfeiture

Unless it is expressly, or by necessary implication, so provided in a street railroad grant or franchise, failure to perform the conditions therein prescribed does not ipso facto work a forfeiture of the grant or franchise, but at most furnishes grounds for forfeiture, and it can be forfeited only in judicial proceedings instituted for that purpose, or by a legislative declaration.

The legislative intent that a forfeiture shall be self-executing must be plain and unmistakable.⁷⁰ Where the consent of a city to the construction of a street railroad is considered a mere license and remains unused for such a length of time as to constitute an abandonment, it has been held that a judicial forfeiture necessary when the existence of the charter is involved is not necessary to render the particular forfeiture effective.⁷¹ It has been held that forfeiture of a street railroad franchise for nonuser may be effected by a declaration of revocation by the duly constituted municipal authorities,⁷² and such revocation, if based on sufficient grounds, is effective, without previous adjudication, from the time it is declared.⁷³

§ 97. — Proceedings to Enforce

Where failure to perform conditions prescribed by a street railroad grant or franchise does not ipso facto work a forfeiture thereof, a cause of forfeiture against the company cannot be enforced in any mode other than by a direct proceeding for that purpose against the company.

Where failure to perform conditions prescribed by a street railroad grant or franchise does not ipso facto work a forfeiture thereof, a cause of forfeiture against the company cannot be taken advantage of or enforced against it, collaterally or incidentally, or in any mode other than by a direct proceeding for that purpose against the company.⁷⁴ Quo warranto is a proper form of proceeding to obtain a forfeiture of the franchise of a street railroad company,⁷⁵ and some decisions hold that it is the exclusive remedy,⁷⁶ and that the franchise cannot be declared forfeited on a bill in equity,⁷⁷ or on a complaint in an action by the state against the corporation asking for forfeiture of the franchise.⁷⁸ There is, however, authority to the effect that there is no reason why the proceeding may not be by regular action;⁷⁹ and that, although equity dislikes to adjudge a forfeiture, and as a rule will do so only when no other adequate remedy is at hand, where parties to street railway franchises have by lawful contract expressly provided for a forfeiture, equity will not hesitate to grant what they have agreed to.⁸⁰

The complaint in proceedings to enforce a forfeiture must state facts showing grounds for forfeiture⁸¹ and present the questions on which an adjudication is desired.⁸² Ouster is the proper judgment on finding a forfeiture;⁸³ and, under some statutes, in addition to the forfeiture, a fine may be imposed.⁸⁴

§ 98. Usurpation of Franchise

The necessity of a franchise to construct and operate a street railroad, and the effect of unauthorized entry on, or occupation of, streets, roads, or bridges are discussed supra §§ 27, 28.

VI. RIGHTS IN, AND USE OF, PRIVATE PROPERTY; AND REMEDIES OF ABUTTING OWNERS

§ 99. Acquisition and Use of Private Property

Generally a street railroad company may acquire from private owners land or a right of way over land for the purpose of constructing and operating a part of its road thereon, by purchase, by lease, or, under some statutes, by voluntary grant or donation; but a mere easement to use private property for a street railroad right of way reverts to the grantor on abandonment of user, and such reversion occurs where the grant of a right of way is expressly limited to the time for which the property is used and occupied for a railway.

In addition to its right to use the streets of a municipality, where conferred by franchise, as discussed supra § 72, it is very generally held that a street railroad company may acquire from private owners land or a right of way over land for the purpose of constructing and operating a part of its road thereon, by purchase,⁸⁵ by lease,⁸⁶ or, under some statutes, by voluntary grant or donation.⁸⁷ The right to acquire the right of way over privately owned land by purchase has been held to exist, regardless of any other existing right to acquire such property by condemnation proceedings.⁸⁸ Private property cannot, however, be used by a street railroad company without right, and the owner of land over which electric power wires have been constructed without right by an interurban railroad may maintain ejectment to compel their removal.⁸⁹ A valid right of the company in the land or right of way acquired by it will be protected by the courts.⁹⁰

General rules as to contracts and conveyances apply with respect to the construction, operation, and effect of a grant or conveyance to a street railroad of a right of way over, or interest in, private property.⁹¹ Contracts to convey a right of way over

private property for the construction and operation of street railroads stand on the same footing as other contracts,⁹² and will be specifically enforced in a proper case,⁹³ as where there has been a substantial compliance with conditions precedent.⁹⁴ Where the company avails itself of the right of way granted by the owner of land to construct its road over such land, the owner may recover such compensation as was agreed on, although the agreement for compensation was oral;⁹⁵ but, where the company is prevented from using such right of way by refusal of consent to its use by the local authorities, the owner cannot recover the full amount of the purchase price, but only an amount sufficient to cover the loss sustained by nonfulfillment of the contract.⁹⁶ Where the consideration for a deed of land for a street railroad company was to furnish to the grantor's family free electric current, "for such length of time, only, as they reside at their present residence," their removal from their residence for a short period of time does not work a forfeiture of the privilege conferred by the deed, especially where it was extended to them after their return;⁹⁷ nor does the fact that title to the residence passed to another give the right of forfeiture, if the family continues to occupy it.⁹⁸ A covenant contained in a grant of a right of way that the street railroad company will maintain a stop on the grantor's premises will be enforced at the instance of the grantor, although it does not designate a definite location for the stop,⁹⁹ but damages may not be recovered for breach of covenant that trains operated over the right of way should stop regularly on signal, where the railroad abandoned the line in good faith because of losses in operation.¹

Generally, a grant of land to construct and operate a street railroad is limited to what is expressly granted,² and, where there has been a prior dedication of the land to public use, nothing in derogation of the public user will be implied.³ A deed which "sells and quitclaims to the grantee all the right, title, and interest" of the grantor carries a fee, and not a mere easement, even though coupled with an agreement that the grantee will use the land for the construction and operation of a street railway,⁴ and although it contains a condition that if, in the future, it shall be abandoned for that purpose, it shall revert to the grantor or to the public.⁵ It has also been held that a deed of land to a holder of a street railway franchise without limitation as to the use to which it might be put, conditioned to be void on the grantee's failure to construct and operate the line of street railway within a designated time, otherwise to be and remain the property of grantee, is an absolute grant of land on the single condition named, and that the grant is not defeated by the railway's discontinuance of operation after a short time.⁶

Under the provisions of some statutes, a voluntary grant or donation of land to a street railroad company vests it with an estate in fee, although the grant was for railroad purposes only.⁷ Under other statutes, although deeds by their terms conveyed a fee to the railroad company, the right of the railroad company to acquire a right of way over private property is limited to an easement,⁸ and the right acquired under the deed expires when the company abandons the use of the land for railroad purposes.⁹ Ordinarily, where private land is acquired for street railroad purposes without any provision for reverter if the railroad should cease to use the realty for such purposes, no right of reverter will be read into the deed,¹⁰ but a mere easement to use private property for a street railroad right of way reverts to the grantor on abandonment of user,¹¹ and such reversion occurs where the grant of a right of way is expressly limited to the time for which the property is used and occupied for a railway.¹²

A change from regular streetcars to trackless trolleys does not constitute an abandonment of the right of way or abandonment of use thereof for "railway purposes" within a deed containing a reversion clause;¹³ and a grant of a right of way across private property by a deed not containing a reversion clause does not revert to the grantor because of a change from an electric streetcar system to a gasoline-driven motorbus line, which change, without being accompanied with heavy additional burdens, did not constitute an abandonment of the right of way.¹⁴ A grant of land to a railway as long as it should be "maintained and operated" thereon has been held not forfeited by abandonment, although only a spur track was maintained;¹⁵ nor is an abandonment effected by a leasing of a small portion of the right of way for nonrailroad use, where the railroad retained the right to terminate the lease in the event it was desired to extend railroad facilities.¹⁶

On abandonment of a right of way and reversion to the grantor or his heirs, a bill may be maintained to compel the company to remove equipment from the right of way,¹⁷ but a power company as successor to the grantee is not obligated to remove the fill and abutments constructed as a suitable roadbed and for maintenance of grade.¹⁸

Power to impose added burdens. A street railroad company which has acquired a right of way over private property cannot grant to another company the right to impose additional burdens thereon.¹⁹ cease to be maintained and operated, on abandonment of the strip for electric railroad purposes, reverter occurred notwithstanding use of the right of way by successor power company for transmission of electricity to operate a railroad elsewhere.—Potomac Edison Co. v. Routzahn, 65 A.2d 580, 192 Md. 449.

Grant of fee with possibility of reverter

A warranty deed with a proviso that the conveyance was subject to the condition that, should the grantee cease to use the land for street railroad purposes, title should revert to the grantor and his heirs and assigns has been held to convey an estate in fee simple determinable with possibility of reverter, and not a condition subsequent, and the possibility of reverter materialized immediately when the railroad company ceased to use the land for street railroad purposes.—Richardson v. Holman, 33 So.2d 641, 160 Fla. 65.

Mode of construction. Under a deed granting a right of way to a suburban electric railroad company and authorizing it to construct and operate its road in the same manner as is authorized by a certain named franchise, which franchise requires the rails to be laid flush with the streets, the company has no right to build and maintain a trestle above grade.²⁰

Consent of local authorities. A provision of a state constitution requiring the consent of local municipal authorities for the construction of street railroads has been held not only to forbid construction without consent on the public streets, but to prohibit their construction on private land without the consent of local authorities, if intended for public transportation.²¹ Under a statute precluding the operation of a road without a location approved by the local authorities, the word "location," as applied to street railways on private lands, means a location in the nature of an easement in such land or of ownership thereof with permission from public authorities to the street railway company to construct and maintain its railway on that land;²² and it has been said that a location through the public streets, connected in any place with a track running through private lands, will not be likely to be approved by the authorities, unless the general arrangement of the course is such as the public convenience requires.²³ On the other hand, it has been held that it is not necessary that the consent of local authorities be obtained as a condition precedent to the location by the company of such portions of its

§ 100. Rights and Remedies of Abutting Owners

The street railroad company and the abutting owners are each entitled to the reasonable use of the street, having due regard to the rights of the other, and each will be liable to the other for injuries resulting from abuse of their respective rights.

The street railroad company and the abutting owners are each entitled to the reasonable use of the street, having due regard to the rights of the other,²⁵ and each will be liable to the other for injuries resulting from abuse of their respective rights.²⁶ The property owner has the right to insist that the street shall not be devoted to a use inconsistent with its purposes as a public street,²⁷ and that the company shall do no unnecessary or unreasonable injury to others.²⁸ So, it has very generally been held that, where a street railroad is constructed without authority of law, or is constructed or operated in an unlawful manner, abutting owners are entitled to damages for such injuries as they may have suffered in consequence thereof,²⁹ if they have not consented to such use,³⁰ or waived the right to recover the damages sustained;³¹ and this right of action exists, although the fee of the street is in the city.³² An agreement to waive damages to land by the obstruction of a highway by a street railroad, in consideration of a money payment and certain promises by the railroad company, is not one which can be specifically enforced in equity in favor of the railroad company.³³

§ 101. — Injunction

- a. In general
- b. Defenses
- c. Parties, pleading, evidence, and decree

a. In General

If a street railroad company has been legally vested with authority to lay out a railroad in a street, abutting owners are not entitled to an injunction to prevent its construction; but the construction and operation of a street railroad on a public street or highway, without authority of law, or in an unlawful manner, are a public nuisance, which any abutting owner who suffers a special injury may sue to enjoin.

If a street railroad company has been legally vested with authority to lay out a railroad in a street, abutting owners are not in any event entitled to an injunction to prevent its construction,³⁴ the remedy, if any, being by action for damages.³⁵ On the other hand, although the rule seems to be otherwise in some jurisdictions,³⁶ it has elsewhere been very generally held that the construction and operation of a street railroad on a public street or highway, without authority of law, or in an unlawful manner, are a public nuisance, which any abutting owner who suffers a special injury may sue to enjoin,³⁷ although he has no title to any part of the street itself.³⁸ It is not necessary that the abutting owner show that the benefits from the railroad will not offset the injuries resulting from the unauthorized construction and operation of the road.³⁹ A city in its proprietary capacity as owner of lots is entitled to an injunction like any other owner.⁴⁰

Inadequacy of the remedy at law by reason of the difficulty of estimating the amount of damages suffered, it has been said, is a sufficient ground why a court of equity should take cognizance of the question.⁴¹ Nevertheless, an abutting owner is not entitled to an injunction against the unauthorized construction and operation of a street railroad unless he has suffered special injury.⁴² It has been held that, while an injunction may be granted abutting owners to prevent construction of a street railway under an invalid ordinance and franchise, a further injunction to prevent the company from accepting an invalid ordinance and franchise will not be granted, as the rights of the abutting owners are fully protected by the injunction forbidding the company to enter on the street on which their property abuts;⁴³ and that the mere grant of consent by the local authorities to the building and operation of a street railroad does not constitute irreparable injury to abutting property, so as to entitle an owner to maintain a suit to enjoin such action.⁴⁴ In accordance with principles governing injunctions in actions generally, it has been held that, although the construction and operation of an additional track were not authorized, the court might, on condition that the company pay damages sustained by plaintiff, an abutting owner, refuse an injunction to compel removal of the track, where for a long period of time plaintiff had made no objection, and where the damage to defendant and to the public caused by the removal of the track would be greatly in excess of the damage to plaintiff by the discontinuance thereof.⁴⁵

Interference with maintenance and operation. If the rerouting of a streetcar line by a city, so as to require a change of cars where none was formerly required, would not prevent efficient service on the line, and subserves the interest of the general public, property owners abutting thereon cannot enjoin the rerouting because of any depreciation in the value of their property caused thereby.⁴⁶

b. Defenses

It is a good defense to an action by an abutting owner to enjoin the construction and operation of a street railroad that he consented thereto, or that he stood by and made no objection when the railroad was constructed, where large sums of money were expended in so doing.

It is a good defense to an action by an abutting owner to enjoin the construction and operation of a street railroad that he consented thereto,⁴⁷ or that he stood by and made no objection when the railroad was constructed, where large sums of money were expended in so doing.⁴⁸ However, consent to construction and operation of a street railroad will not estop the abutting owner from objecting to other construction which will constitute the imposition of an additional burden on the street or highway, such as a switch,⁴⁹ and this is true, even though the switch is necessary to the operation of the main line,⁵⁰ and although the power is conferred on the company to lay switches by its charter and by the franchise granted by the local authorities.⁵¹ It has similarly been held that acquiescence in the use of two tracks of an elevated road for a long period of time does not affect the abutting owner's right to object to a third track.⁵²

Delay in bringing suit to enjoin construction of a street railroad does not amount to laches where it is caused by negotiations of the parties to avoid litigation;⁵³ nor does mere delay alone within the statutory period for relief at law bar the abutting owner from securing an injunction.⁵⁴ Also, the right to injunctive relief is not barred by laches where the suit for injunction was commenced within two weeks after the work of construction began, and where the owner had no knowledge before that time that the work was about to commence.⁵⁵

c. Parties, Pleading, Evidence, and Decree

Two or more owners, who will be similarly affected by the construction of a street railroad without authority of law in the street on which their property abuts, may unite in an action to enjoin the construction. It must be alleged and proved that the construction and operation is without authority of law, that it constitutes a public nuisance, and that the complainant will suffer special injury different from that sustained by the general public.

Two or more owners, who will be similarly affected by the construction of a street railroad without authority of law in the street on which their property abuts, may unite in an action to enjoin the construction,⁵⁶ where it would do common injury to them independent of, and different from, that which the public suffers.⁵⁷ It has been held, however, that one owner cannot maintain an action to enjoin the construction on behalf of himself and all abutting property owners, since they have no common or general interest.⁵⁸ In a suit by property owners on a street to prevent the construction of a street railroad thereon, other property owners who consented to such building are not necessary parties.⁵⁹ So it has been held that the city is not a proper party to an action by a property owner to enjoin the unauthorized construction of a street railroad,⁶⁰ although the lack of authority to construct results from the invalidity of the grant by the city of a franchise for such construction.⁶¹ A reservation by a grantor of damages to the premises conveyed, caused by the construction and operation of an elevated railroad in the street on which the premises abut, does not establish any trust relation between the grantor and the grantee, and, therefore, the grantor is not entitled to be made a party in an action by the grantee against the company to recover such damages.⁶² In an action to enjoin the operation of a street railroad, a company which has leased the street railroad since the commencement of the action should be brought in as a defendant by supplemental summons and complaint.⁶³

Pleading. A bill or complaint by an abutting owner, to enjoin the construction and operation of a street railroad on a street on which his property abuts, must allege that the construction and operation are without authority of law,⁶⁴ that they constitute a public nuisance,⁶⁵ and that complainant will suffer special injury different from that sustained by the general public.⁶⁶ The fact that plaintiff has prayed for more relief than he is entitled to does not preclude an award of such part thereof as is warranted by the pleadings and proof.⁶⁷

In accordance with rules governing actions for injunctions generally, the pleadings and proof in actions for injunctions of this nature must correspond, and a material variance is fatal to a recovery.⁶⁸

Evidence. In order to authorize the issuance of an injunction in an action of the character under consideration, complainant must show by competent evidence that the construction and operation of the road would constitute a public nuisance,⁶⁹ and that complainant would suffer special injury different in kind from that sustained by the general public.⁷⁰ It has been held, however, that, when lack of authority to construct the road is alleged, the burden is then on the company to show its authority.⁷¹ Where plaintiffs contend that the county authorities have not given their consent for the railway company to appropriate that part of the public road of the county between two cities, and that, therefore, it will be impossible for the company to construct and operate a continuous road as contemplated, evidence that, if there should be any difficulty in obtaining the consent of the county authorities the company could and would acquire the property contiguous to such public road is admissible.⁷²

Decree. Where the company does not begin to construct its road until after its franchise therefor has expired, an owner of property abutting on the line of the proposed road under process of construction is entitled to a continuance of a temporary injunction during the pendency of an action perpetually to enjoin the construction of the road.⁷³ Where the company has been enjoined from operating its road because the necessary consent of the county court has not been obtained, it is not error to refuse to modify the decree so as to allow the company permission to use one side of the street, instead of the center, since such modification would be granting the company a right which it could obtain only from the county court.⁷⁴ On rendition of a decree for damages in making an excavation in front of plaintiff's premises and in constructing and maintaining a street railroad and enjoining its further maintenance, damages should not be awarded for permanent injury, but only for the injury done up to the time of the decree.⁷⁵

§ 102. — Actions for Damages

In defense of an action by an abutting owner to recover for injuries sustained by him by the unauthorized construction and operation of a street railroad in a street on which his property abuts, it cannot be set up as a defense that the road is liable to abatement as a nuisance.

In defense of an action for damages, by an abutting owner to recover for injuries sustained by him by the unauthorized construction and operation of a street railroad in a street on which his property abuts, it cannot be set up as a defense that the road is liable to abatement as a nuisance; defendant, having availed itself of the grant of authority, is estopped to question its validity.⁷⁶

Pleadings and evidence. Rules governing pleadings,⁷⁷ and burden of proof,⁷⁸ and admissibility⁷⁹ of evidence in actions for damages generally apply in actions by abutting owners to recover damages resulting from the unauthorized construction or operation of street railroads in front of their premises.

VII. CONSTRUCTION, MAINTENANCE, AND EQUIPMENT

A. IN GENERAL

§ 103. Duty to Construct

While a street railroad company may under some circumstances be obligated to construct a street railroad line, and may be compelled to act by appropriate remedy, mere authority to construct imposes no positive obligation on the company to do so.

While a street railroad company, by procuring the enactment of, and accepting, a statute granting a franchise to construct a line, may be obligated to construct such line,⁸⁰ mere authority to construct a street railroad is permissive only, and imposes no positive obligation on the company to do so.⁸¹ If, however, the company builds at all, it has no right to stop when it has finished a part, and operate its cars on that part, but is bound to go on and complete the road in its entirety,⁸² where, by the terms of its contract with the municipality, the company is obliged to complete the road.⁸³ The company's failure strictly to comply with a provision of the ordinance, granting permission to construct the line, for a formal acceptance of such ordinance, does not necessarily prevent the existence of the duty to construct.⁸⁴

Extent of duty. Where the franchise or ordinance authorizing construction makes the necessity for construction contingent on the existence of certain conditions, the grantee of the right or privilege is not obliged to construct in the absence of the existence of such conditions.⁸⁵ There is no public duty to perform an act forbidden by a state statute, notwithstanding the ordinance granting permission to construct involves the performance of such act.⁸⁶

Bond for completion. It is proper for the municipal authorities to require the giving of a bond to secure the performance of a condition for the proper completion of the road,⁸⁷ and such a bond when given to secure the proper completion of a railroad in accordance with the terms and conditions of a valid franchise is valid.⁸⁸ If the franchise is invalid, there is no consideration for the bond, and it is of no effect.⁸⁹ So, also, if the franchise does not become operative or is forfeited, because of non-compliance with a condition precedent, a surety on a bond given to cover the construction of the road

What constitutes construction. A contract by which a person agrees to pay to a street railroad company a specified amount after the completion of the railroad to a certain point must receive a reasonable construction,⁹¹ and is sufficiently complied with where, for a portion of the route involved, the company acquires the right to use the tracks of another company pursuant to a statute which was in force when the contract was made.⁹²

What company obligated. A street railroad company which succeeds to the rights, franchises, privileges, and obligations of another company rests under the same duty to construct the line as was imposed on its predecessor.⁹³

Termination of, or discharge from, duty. A company or its successor is not relieved of the former's duty to construct or to complete its line merely by the fact that it has failed to complete it within the time fixed by the municipal authorities for completion,⁹⁴ by the fact that, after a failure to complete construction within the time limited, the municipality fails to act on a proposed ordinance extending the time, when the municipality has always insisted on performance,⁹⁵ or by the fact that it stops work under circumstances within the specific terms of a provision of the ordinance granting permission to construct, that if the company so stops work the permission shall be null and void, where the municipality insists on completion.⁹⁶

Remedies. Where a railroad company is bound by law to construct a line, ordinarily it may be compelled to act, by an appropriate remedy,⁹⁷ even where relief is sought by a private individual whose property rights are involved.⁹⁸

§ 104. Time for Construction

Construction of a street railroad should begin or be completed within the time limited by charter or other statutory provisions or ordinances, or within a reasonable time if there is no prescribed time limit.

The time for construction may be limited by charter or other statutory provisions or ordinances,⁹⁹ and, where the time is so limited, any construction of the road after the expiration of the specified time is unauthorized,¹ and may be enjoined.² Even though the consent to construct a street railroad prescribes no time limit, the right must be exercised within a reasonable time,³ and in such case the company may, by long delay in commencing construction, lose the right to claim the benefit of the consent.⁴

Authority and duty to fix and extend limitation. Usually the municipal authorities may properly impose as a condition to the granting of a franchise or consent that the construction of the road shall be completed and that it shall be put in operation within a designated time,⁵ although the period fixed by the local authorities for completion of construction is less than that designated in a statute providing that unless a railroad is constructed within a given time such failure may work a forfeiture of its franchise,⁶ or requiring that the company shall complete its road within two years after consent of the local authorities unless the time shall be extended by such authorities.⁷ The time specified is not irrevocable, but may be extended by the power that fixed it,⁸ except that when fixed by statute a different period cannot be fixed in the grant of the use of streets by local authorities.⁹

Excuses for delay. While the failure of a street railroad company to construct a certain part of its line within the time limited is not necessarily excused by the pendency of legal proceedings which prevented the completion of another part, the non-construction of which does not affect the desirability or convenience of constructing the part first mentioned,¹⁰ in general, time unavoidably consumed by legal proceedings should not be deemed a part of, but should be added to, the time limit,¹¹ and a valid provision in the authorization for the construction of a street railroad, prepared by public officers, that the period of unavoidable delays shall not be included in the limited period for construction, may be given effect.¹²

Security for construction. Where there is a failure to commence or complete the road within the time limited, the municipality concerned may claim the benefit of a bond given,¹³ or of a deposit made,¹⁴ to secure the completion within such time. Recovery on a bond has been denied, however, where the construction of the road was prevented by the re-

§ 105. Plan and Mode of Construction

- a. In general
- b. Manner of construction as creating nuisance

a. In General

Unless limited by charter or other statutory provision or by ordinance, a street railroad company has large discretionary powers with respect to the plan and mode of construction of the railroad, but should construct the road in such manner as to do as little injury as is reasonably possible.

Unless limited by charter or other statutory provision or by ordinance, a railroad company or other entity entitled to construct a street railroad may begin the construction of the road in any part of the route, whether it is the charter route or an extension;¹⁷ may lay its tracks¹⁸ and place its poles¹⁹ on such part of the street as is deemed best; need not lay any particular style of rail;²⁰ may change the style of rail²¹ and the gauge²² originally adopted; may change the line from double to single track;²³ and may install equipment reasonably required to insure the safe and proper operation of its road.²⁴ So, when it is given an election, the company may choose either of two ways of laying tracks.²⁵

Even in the absence of an obligation created by statute or ordinance,²⁶ a street railroad company must construct its road,²⁷ including the laying of rails²⁸ and the placing of poles and wires,²⁹ in such manner as to do as little injury to the street, and to offer as little hindrance or to present as little danger, in respect of public travel thereon, as is reasonably possible.

Agreement for payment of specified sum by private individual. A stipulation in an agreement by a private individual for payment of a specified sum to a street railroad company on the completion of a double track railroad has been held sufficiently complied with notwithstanding only a single track was constructed where the railroad turned a corner.³⁰

b. Manner of Construction as Creating Nuisance

A street railroad built by authority of law and in a lawful manner is not a nuisance, but an unauthorized or unlawful construction may constitute a nuisance.

in a lawful manner is not a nuisance, and, therefore, can work no legal injury, either to the public or to any private individual.³¹ It may occasion inconvenience or loss, or may depreciate the value of property, and render its enjoyment incommodious and almost impossible, yet this is damnum absque injuria.³²

The construction and maintenance of a street railroad along the public streets of a city, without authority of law, or in an unlawful manner, may, however, constitute a nuisance.³³ So a street railroad may constitute a nuisance where the rails unduly project above the surface of the street or road.³⁴

§ 106. — Municipal and State Regulation

A street railroad company must comply with valid regulations or requirements of state or municipal authorities as to the method or mode of construction.

It is the duty of a street railroad company to comply with valid regulations or requirements of state or municipal authorities as to the method or mode of construction.³⁵ Usually a municipality has authority to make reasonable regulations as to the manner in which a street railroad company, empowered by its charter or other statute to occupy the streets of the municipality, shall lay its tracks in the public streets, even though the charter is silent on the subject.³⁶ Under some statutes designated commissioners are authorized to formulate plans for the construction of street railroads.³⁷

Express statutory provisions conferring authority on a municipality will be given effect when the authority is properly exercised.³⁸ Where the consent and approval of the municipal authorities are necessary to the construction of a street railroad, they may, as a condition to the granting of such consent or approval, impose such reasonable terms and conditions as the public interests may require.³⁹ The power of the municipality does not, however, extend to matters not included by the legislature,⁴⁰ and conditions which the municipal authorities have no power to impose are void.⁴¹ So where a franchise granted by a municipality includes the right to construct turnouts, sidetracks, and switches, the approval of the plan of construction is not necessarily required.⁴²

Where a street railroad company authorized to construct tracks in the streets of a municipality departs from the plan adopted by the municipality for the construction thereof, the municipality may compel conformity to the plan adopted,⁴³ or it may ratify the variation by a formal change of plan⁴⁴ or by informal acquiescence.⁴⁵

Reasonable exercise of power. The regulatory powers of a municipality may not be exercised in an unreasonable manner,⁴⁶ but where conditions imposed by a municipality are reasonable, and otherwise valid, the discretion of the municipal authorities in this respect cannot be controlled by the courts.⁴⁷ Even though a statute conferring on a public utility commission the power to determine the number of tracks to be laid by any street railway on a bridge contains no specific provisions as to the rules to govern the determination of the commission, such statute has been so construed as not to permit an arbitrary determination by the commission, but to require that its determination shall be based on a finding of public convenience, necessity, or safety.⁴⁸

Necessity for exercise of power. A municipality may not refuse to exercise its power of regulation of street railroads;⁴⁹ nor can it deprive itself by contract of the right to exercise the power.⁵⁰ A statutory provision that, when a municipality authorizes the use of poles, it "may" prescribe the manner in which, and the places where, such poles shall be located and the manner in which wires shall be strung has been construed as mandatory.⁵¹

§ 107. — Relocation of Tracks and Other Changes Required or Authorized by Public Authorities

- a. In general
- b. Municipal or local authorities

a. In General

Public officers or bodies duly authorized have power to require or authorize reasonable changes in the construction of street railroads where the public interest or convenience requires such changes.

The power of public officers or bodies, duly authorized, to require or authorize reasonable changes in the construction of street railroads where the public interest or convenience requires such changes has frequently been recognized,⁵² at least where the power has duly been reserved by statute and conferred on the public authorities who seek to exercise such power.⁵³ Thus, in general, a street railroad company holds its franchise subject to the obligation to relocate its tracks in a street occupied by it,⁵⁴ and under some statutes a relocation is required where the public road on which the tracks are located is improved.⁵⁵ In the due exercise of the police power, the state may require such a relocation.⁵⁶ The question as to whether the cost of relocation must be borne by the street railroad company may depend on the construction of the statute providing for relocation.⁵⁷

Murray*, 8 N.E.2d 29, 273 N.Y. 447.

Condemnation of right of way

In securing removal of streetcar tracks to allow for street widening to care for heavy traffic, city did not need to condemn old right of way.—People v. Chicago City Ry. Co., 155 N.E. 781, 324 Ill. 618.

Authority of state boards or commissions. The authority of state public utility boards or commissions to direct certain structural changes may be exercised under some statutes.⁵⁸ The mere shifting of tracks to the center of the streets is not a relocation of a railroad within the meaning of certain statutes conferring authority on the railroad commission,⁵⁹ and under some statutes the state roads commission is not empowered to compel a street railroad company to make a relocation of its tracks at its own expense, required by improvements made by the commission.⁶⁰

b. Municipal or Local Authorities

Municipal or local authorities have power to require or authorize reasonable changes in the construction of street railroads where the legislature has delegated such power to them or where such authority has been duly reserved and the public interests demand.

A municipality may require a relocation of the tracks of a street railroad where the legislature has delegated to it the police power in this respect,⁶¹ and an ordinance repealing an earlier ordinance, and requiring a new location of tracks, does not constitute an unlawful impairment of contract obligations where it is enacted in the exercise of reasonable discretion for the convenience and safety of the public.⁶² So, also, where authority in this respect has duly been reserved and the public interests demand, a municipality may require such a relocation,⁶³ and a like rule applies where the legislature has conferred on the municipality express authority in this regard.⁶⁴

A municipality may not require a relocation of tracks in the assumed exercise of the police power, in the absence of a due delegation to it by the legislature of such power;⁶⁵ and, in the absence of such delegation, of other authority conferred by the legislature, and of a reservation of authority in this regard, a municipality may not require a relocation.⁶⁶ So, where the charter of a street railroad company requires the location of its tracks in a certain part of the street, local authorities may not require a relocation under general authority conferred on them to control the location of street railroad tracks.⁶⁷ Municipal authorities may, by acquiescence, lose the right to attack the relocation of tracks on the ground that they did not consent to such relocation.⁶⁸

Relocation of subway kiosks. Where the railroad company has, under its contract with the municipality, acquired the right to a fixed or specific location in public streets for its subway kiosks, and the location is, therefore, of the substance of its franchise, it has been held that the municipality may not, in the exercise of its general regulatory power in respect of public streets, require the railroad company to relocate such kiosks,⁶⁹ and that the state alone can require the company to make the change or authorize the municipality to act.⁷⁰

Relocation of poles. The authority of a municipality to require the relocation of the poles of a street railroad company, which, although not dangerous when erected, subsequently become dangerous, has been recognized, on the theory that the original location was not of the substance of the franchise.⁷¹

Change of gauge. In the absence of any reserved authority or statutory authorization, the municipality may not require a change of gauge.⁷²

Substitution of rails. While the courts, under certain circumstances, have denied the authority of the municipality to require a substitution,⁷³ there is authority for the view that local authorities may require the substitution of rails where the existing rails are such as seriously to interfere with the use of the road by the public,⁷⁴ and under due reservation of authority in this respect, the municipality may require such substitution.⁷⁵

Changes to permit use by another railroad company. Where there is a valid contract between the municipality and a railroad company, in respect of the construction and equipment of the road, the company may not be required to make changes in order to permit the use of the road by another railroad company, in the absence of any reservation of power in that regard.⁷⁶

Temporary bridge over tracks. In the absence of a delegation thereof by charter or statutory provisions a municipal board is without power, jurisdiction, or authority to require the erection of a temporary pedestrian bridge across street railroad tracks.⁷⁷

§ 108. — Remedies

Appropriate actions may be pursued in the case of defaults or breaches of duty relating to the plan and mode of construction of street railroads.

Where a street railroad company fails to comply with the conditions and restrictions imposed on it by statute or ordinance as to the plan and mode of construction, it may be compelled to do so by a suit in equity⁷⁸ or, as shown in Mandamus § 231 e, by mandamus. So a municipality may sue to enjoin a street railroad company from unlawfully obstructing a street by the manner in which it is constructing its tracks.⁷⁹ Where a contract exists between the company and the municipality, it may be enforced by a mandatory injunction,⁸⁰ or the municipality may sue for damages for a breach of the contract.⁸¹ Likewise, a street railroad company is entitled to an injunction to prevent unlawful interference with the construction of its road by the municipal authorities;⁸² but if the acts of one of two companies constructing a railroad through the same street amount to a public nuisance or obstruction of the way, it is for the public, and not for the other company, to complain, in the absence of special injury.⁸³ A municipality may, under a charter provision authorizing it to cause any nuisance to be abated, abate an unauthorized street railway under general ordinance,⁸⁴ but not under a resolution aimed at one particular railway.⁸⁵ An action by

§ 109. Removal of Tracks and Other Railroad Property

In the absence of authority granted by the legislature, a municipality ordinarily has no power to remove tracks, but the company may be required to remove them where they are in the streets without authority and constitute a trespass or a public nuisance.

Under authority to exercise a supervisory control over the use of streets by street railroads, the municipality has no power to remove tracks;⁸⁷ nor may it do so under an assumed exercise of the police power, where the legislature has not conferred the right to exercise the police power in this respect.⁸⁸ The company may be required to remove its tracks and other property from the streets, however, where they are there without authority and constitute a trespass or a public nuisance,⁸⁹ as where the full term of the grant has expired⁹⁰ or has duly been revoked,⁹¹ or where the company has forfeited a particular location by breach of an implied condition of the grant of location that it be used for the purpose for which it was granted.⁹² If the company desires to remove them, it may not,

ordinarily, be prevented from so doing.⁹³

Temporary removal. A statutory provision permitting a municipality to enter into a contract with a street railroad company, which contract would form part of the company's charter, for the removal of tracks from a street for a definite period, not to exceed a period specified, does not authorize an ordinance permitting the railroad company temporarily to remove tracks, with the approval of a certain municipal department, when the company certifies that it has no present use for such tracks.⁹⁴

Loss of right to remove or compel removal. While apparently a view to the contrary has been taken,⁹⁵ there is authority for the view that municipal or local officers who have knowingly and without objection permitted a street railway to be constructed cannot remove or compel removal on the ground that the required consent was not given.⁹⁶

Action for damages for removal. The owner of a street railroad may not recover damages for the removal of tracks by municipal authorities where the ordinance under which the road was constructed reserved to the municipality the right to remove such tracks in the event that the owner failed to comply with such conditions and it is shown that he did not comply therewith,⁹⁷ but such owner may, in a proper case, be entitled to recover for the conversion of such rails by the municipal authorities after removal.⁹⁸

§ 110. Liability for Labor, Work, or Materials

A street railroad company is liable for material purchased by an authorized officer or agent on the credit of the company.

A street railroad company is liable for material purchased by an authorized officer or agent on the credit of the company, notwithstanding the officer or agent was under contract with the company to furnish it himself, since that is a subject for adjustment between the officer and the company and is not enough to defeat the seller of the material who is otherwise entitled to recover.⁹⁹

B. RESTORATION, PAVING, AND REPAIR OF STREETS AND MAINTENANCE OF RAILROAD

§ 111. In General

A street railroad company may be obliged to restore the street after it has constructed its line, and to maintain its facilities in proper condition.

While the duty to restore the street is sometimes imposed by statute,¹ even in the absence of any express contract provision, statute, or ordinance so requiring, a street railroad company may be obliged to restore the street after it has constructed its line,² and to maintain its tracks and other facilities in proper condition³ so as not unnecessarily to interfere with the use of the street by others⁴ and so as not to cause undue danger to others;⁵ and it must make a street occupied by it suitable to its needs without the aid of the municipality.⁶

It has been recognized that a municipality has authority to make or enforce reasonable regulations or requirements as to the condition in which a street railroad company shall maintain its tracks in public streets,⁷ under the police power⁸ and statutory provisions.⁹ Where matters involved relate to the regulation of streets and highways and to the control of the improvement of them, according to some cases, they involve the exercise of the police power, which municipal and other local authorities may not surrender by agreements with street railroad companies,¹⁰ and a grant of the use of a street for a street railroad is accepted subject to the reasonable and necessary exercise of such power by the municipality.¹¹

Nuisance. A street railroad may constitute a nuisance where, for want of repair, the rails unduly project above the surface of the street or road,¹² or where the rails otherwise become dangerous;¹³ and the municipality may sue to enjoin the maintenance of such nuisance.¹⁴

Injury or damage sustained by company. The company cannot successfully complain of any injury to its business by reason of the stoppage of its traffic, necessitated by the doing of work by the municipality which the railroad company should have done, if such stoppage was reasonably necessary to the work.¹⁵

Ownership of paving. Where pursuant to a duty imposed on it, the street railroad paves portions of the street along its right of way, it acquires no title to the paving, and the city can make no contract surrendering its authority over the paved strips or vesting title thereto in the company.¹⁶

§ 112. Duty to Repair Street in General

The duty of street railroad companies to keep the portions of streets occupied by their right of way in good condition may be imposed by statutes, ordinances, or contracts, and even in the absence thereof the duty has been held to exist.

While there is apparently some authority to the contrary,¹⁷ it has been held or recognized, even in the absence of any express contract or statutory direction to that effect, that a street railroad company is bound to keep the portions of streets occupied by its right of way in good condition,¹⁸ or in reasonably safe condition for travel.¹⁹ That obligation is an implied condition annexed to every grant authorizing a railway to occupy any portion of a public thoroughfare,²⁰ and the assumption of an obligation by the city to take care of all matters relating to the paving of the streets cannot be construed to be an exemption of the company from its duty properly to maintain its tracks in good condition.²¹

Duty imposed by statutes or ordinances. Statutes, ordinances, charters, and franchises requiring persons who use the streets for railway purposes to keep them in repair during such use have been held to be merely declaratory of the common law.²² According to some cases, ordinance requirements as to repairs are not matters of contract but are regulations,²³ involving the exercise of the police power,²⁴ at least in respect of the kinds of repair,²⁵ and a municipality may require a company to keep the track zone in repair even in the absence of statutory authorization.²⁶

While the view has been expressed that the enactment of a statute imposing on a street railroad company the duty to repair a certain portion of the streets is an exercise of the taxing power,²⁷ it has been held that the duty to repair is not in the nature of an assessment liability, and the requirement that the railway meet the expense thereof is in no possible sense an assessment.²⁸ According to some cases, the state, in enacting such a statute, acts under the police power,²⁹ which is binding on all citizens.³⁰ Such a statute must be given effect,³¹

and, if duly authorized so to do, the municipality may require a compliance with such duty;³² but it has been held that the burden of maintaining streets in reasonably safe condition is not shifted from the city to the street railway company by a statute of this nature.³³ A statutory provision as to repairs has no application to a street railroad company which is not operating under such statute.³⁴

Duty imposed by contract or terms of grant or permission. Contracts with a municipality imposing on a street railroad company duties as to the repair of streets occupied by a street railroad company will be given effect³⁵ and enforced,³⁶ and under its general power to impose such terms as it may deem fit in granting permission to construct, maintain, and operate a street railroad, a municipality may impose on the grantee the duty to keep in repair that portion of streets which is occupied by the company,³⁷ and, according to some cases, on acceptance of the grant, a contract is created,³⁸ and the terms and conditions as to repairs are binding on the grantee.³⁹ It has been held, however, that, in imposing restrictions as to repairs, the local authorities act as public officers and not as trustees of the municipality,⁴⁰ that, in a strict sense, the acceptance of the grant does not create a contract,⁴¹ and that a provision as to the manner of repairing is regulatory and not contractual.⁴² In determining questions as to the duty to repair, a grant is to be strongly construed against the grantee and favorably to the public.⁴³

§ 113. Duty to Pave or Otherwise Improve Street or to Pay Therefor in General

The duty of a street railroad company to improve or pave the street or pay the cost thereof may be imposed by legislative authority or exist by virtue of some contract, and does not generally exist in the absence of such statute or contract.

While there is authority for the view that, under its general duty to keep the portions of the street occupied by it in good condition, a street railroad company may, under certain circumstances be required to pave,⁴⁴ it has been held or recognized that the duty of a street railroad to improve or pave the street, or a portion thereof, or to pay the cost thereof, must be imposed by legislative authority, or exist by virtue of some contract, express or implied,⁴⁵ and that the common-law obligation so to use the right of way as to avoid obstructing travel cannot be stretched to include the duty to rebuild any portion of the street or to pave that portion of the street occupied by the tracks where the franchise imposes no obligation on the railway company to improve or repair any part of the street.⁴⁶

road companies the duty to pave, or to pay for paving, must be given effect,⁴⁷ including provisions existing when such company accepts its franchise for the use of streets.⁴⁸ The view has been taken that, in order that a statute may be construed as imposing a liability in respect of paving, the intention of the legislature should be expressed in language which is not ambiguous.⁴⁹

Imposition of duty by municipality in general. According to some cases, a municipality may not require a street railroad company to improve the street occupied by such company's tracks, in the absence of statutory authorization of the municipality in this regard.⁵⁰ Thus, the powers of the municipality in respect of imposing on street railroad companies obligations as to paving are derived solely from statute, and it can exercise only such powers as are there conferred,⁵¹ in the manner prescribed, when the mode of exercise is prescribed in the statute;⁵² and the attempted imposition by a municipality of the duty to pave is an assumption of the power of taxation,⁵³ and, while there is authority apparently to the contrary,⁵⁴ the view has been taken, that, merely in the exercise of the police power, a municipality may not require a street railroad company to pave.⁵⁵

The power to require street railroad companies to pave is sometimes conferred on municipalities by express statutory provisions,⁵⁶ and, according to some cases, the power may be exercised under a statutory provision that a street railroad is subject to such reasonable rules and regulations as municipal authorities may prescribe,⁵⁷ or under a provision of a franchise that it is subject to such regulations as to streets and highways as the municipal council may from time to time enact,⁵⁸ and even under statutory provision giving the municipality exclusive control and power over its streets.⁵⁹ On the other hand, it has been held that a municipality may not impose on the railroad company obligations in respect of paving under a statutory provision that the company shall be subject to ordinances regulating the running of passenger railway cars,⁶⁰ and, where a street railroad is authorized by its charter to use streets without the consent of the municipality, the latter may not impose terms in respect of paving.⁶¹

It is usually recognized that a municipality and a street railroad company may enter into a contract by which the company becomes obligated to pave,⁶² and usually a municipality has authority to include in its consent to, or grant of, the use of a street for street railroad purposes a provision requiring the grantee to pave, or to pay for paving, a certain portion of streets on which the tracks are located,⁶³ even, according to some cases, in the absence of an express statutory provision authorizing such stipulation;⁶⁴ and, where the grant is accepted, it becomes a binding contract between the municipality and the company,⁶⁵ and the company is bound to comply with such a provision as to paving.⁶⁶ An agreement by a street railroad company which is without consideration is not enforceable.⁶⁷

A street railroad company which accepts, and continues to enjoy the benefits of, an ordinance granting permission to use streets may not reject the burdens imposed with respect to paving,⁶⁸ even though the grant by the municipality,⁶⁹ or the work which the municipality did, out of which the obligation of the company arises,⁷⁰ is ultra vires.

The necessity that ordinances purporting to impose the duty to pave should be reasonable has been asserted,⁷¹ and the view has been taken that municipal ordinances requiring street railroad companies to pave the streets occupied by them relate only to such companies as are required by their several charters to do this,⁷² or to such as are amenable to conditions precedent imposed, in pursuance of acts of the legislature, by the municipality as the price and consideration of its consent to their occupation of the streets.⁷³ In determining whether the duty in respect of paving has been imposed on a street railroad company by a franchise agreement between such company and a municipality, the agreement must be construed as a whole and given effect in all its parts.⁷⁴

Strict construction of franchise. The general rule that provisions in a street railroad franchise are to be strictly construed against the grantee and in favor of the public applies in determining the question as to the duty of the grantee to pave or to pay for paving.⁷⁵

§ 114. Substitution of State for Municipality as Party to Contract and Authority of State Officers or Boards

Statutes may validly substitute the state for a municipality as a party to a contract with a street railroad company for the maintenance of a highway.

A statute providing that the state shall succeed to, and take over to itself, the rights of a municipality under a contract between such municipality and a street railroad company providing for the maintenance by the railroad company of a highway which becomes a state highway is valid.⁷⁶ It substitutes the state for the municipality as a party to the contract and vests in the state the municipality's rights under the contract,⁷⁷ and constitutes the state the only party or entity which may enforce such contract against the railroad company.⁷⁸

Public utility boards. Certain statutes defining the powers of state public utility boards or commissions have been so construed as not to give to such boards or commissions general control over contracts between street railroad companies and

Duty equivalent to special assessment

Where agreement between city and street railroad requires railroad to pave, maintain, and repair portions of the street in consideration of rights and privileges granted, duty of maintenance thus created is equivalent to a special assessment on railway's right of way, as if railroad had paid consideration in cash and city used the money to lay and maintain pavement.—People v. municipalities, in respect of the maintenance or repair of streets or highways.⁷⁹ Under other statutes, the public service commission has been granted certain supervisory powers over street railroad companies in respect of their charter duties as to the maintenance and repair of streets between, and adjacent to their tracks, and the maintenance of tracks,⁸⁰ but such a statutory provision is repealed as to conflicting matters included in a subsequent statute conferring on a municipality the power to impose on the street railroad company concerned terms, conditions, and regulations as to the use and occupancy of streets of the municipality by such company.⁸¹

§ 115. Scope and Extent of Duty

The scope and extent of the duty of a street railroad company in respect of repairing or improving streets are generally determined by the terms of the governing statute, ordinance, or contract.

Subject to the rules sometimes recognized, as discussed supra §§ 111-113 and infra § 117, which impose certain so-called common-law duties on street railroad companies, the scope and extent of the obligation or duty of a street railroad company in respect of repairing, paving, or otherwise improving streets are determined by the terms of the governing statute, ordinance, or contract,⁸² and the duty imposed on railroad companies by statute to keep in good and safe condition a certain portion of streets occupied by their tracks is the same as that which rests on the municipality.⁸³ Reasonable care and diligence are the measure of the duty.⁸⁴ The implied obligation of the railway company to repair and maintain the portion of the street occupied under its franchise cannot be judicially enlarged or extended to impose an additional obligation to rebuild or improve the space along the tracks so as to bring it into conformity with municipal ideals of street improvement or street reconstruction.⁸⁵

Continuing duty. The duty to repair is a continuing one;⁸⁶ and a duty to "lay and maintain" pavement is not limited to paving only, but includes the maintenance of the pavement.⁸⁷

What streets included. The duty of a street railroad company to pave a portion of streets occupied by its road applies, in general, to any public street so occupied,⁸⁸ even though, under some statutes, no cars are operated over the tracks.⁸⁹ Where the language of the controlling municipal grant, imposing duties as to improvements or repairs necessarily relates to streets occupied by the grantee, the duty does not extend to a street in which the railroad is not built,⁹⁰ even though the grant includes the right to build in such street,⁹¹ and, usually, no company may be compelled to pay for paving in a street not occupied by it.⁹²

Private right of way. The police powers vested in a municipality or public service commission do not authorize it to compel a street railroad company to pave between its rails where its tracks are laid on its private property on which the public has no right to enter;⁹³ and a statute requiring such utility to keep its facilities reasonably safe for patrons, employees, and the public cannot be construed to mean that the entire plant of the utility must be maintained so as to be safe for the public to enter upon its private property in invitum.⁹⁴

§ 116. — Change in Obligation by Subsequent Statute or Municipal Ordinance or Action

Where the obligation of a street railroad company in respect of repairs or paving is fixed by charter, statute or grant, it may not be enlarged, in the absence of valid statutory authorization or reservation of power to do so; and, where the subject has become a matter of contract, the contract may not be impaired by the imposition of additional burdens by subsequent statute or municipal action or ordinance.

The municipality may not enlarge the obligation, in the absence of valid statutory authorization or of a valid reservation of power to do so, where the obligation of a street railroad company in respect of repairs or paving is fixed by its charter or other statute,⁹⁵ or by a municipal grant;⁹⁶ nor can it revoke or infringe rights vested by the franchise;⁹⁷ and, in general, where the subject of paving has become a matter of contract, the contract may not be impaired by the imposition of additional burdens by subsequent state statute⁹⁸ or municipal action or ordinance.⁹⁹ If a street railroad company is legally bound only to repair, and not to repave, local authorities may not require the company to repave even though repaving would cost less than repairs.¹

No question can arise, however, as to the impairment of the obligation of a contract, where the company accepts all of its corporate powers and franchises subject to the reserved power of the state to modify its charter and to impose additional burdens upon the enjoyment of its franchise,² and a modification of a franchise by statute accepted by the grantee does not constitute an impairment of the obligation of the contract.³ Where no contract is involved, ordinarily a subsequent statute as to paving supersedes prior municipal ordinances on the subject and is controlling.⁴ So the power of the municipality to change the terms of a franchise ordinance as to paving, under certain circumstances, has been recognized,⁵ and mere reasonable regulations as to the details of carrying out an obligation previously imposed may be made by the municipality.⁶ As a consideration for the grant of additional privileges, the municipality may impose new or additional burdens.⁷ A resolution of a municipality requiring a street railway company to replace a portion of its track, which has been destroyed, and reciting that the company is bound to do so under the ordinance granting its privileges does not attempt to change or alter such ordinance, but is merely an assertion of what the city claims to be the company's duty thereunder, with a demand that it comply therewith.⁸

§ 117. — Portion of Street Included

The common-law duty of a street railroad company to keep that portion of the street occupied by it in repair at least to the end of its crossties may be enlarged by proper statutory or municipal authority or by contract; and in general the extent of the company's duty depends on the terms of the governing statute, ordinance, or contract.

The common-law duty of a street railroad company to keep the portion of the street or highway occupied by it in repair extends, it has been held, at least to the end of its crossties,⁹ and this duty may be enlarged by proper statutory or municipal authority or by a contract voluntarily entered into.¹⁰ No duty to repair ordinarily rests on the company as to the part of the street not occupied by the right of way, and where as to that part any such duty exists, it must be by virtue of statutory imposition or of contract.¹¹ In granting the use of the street, however, the municipality may impose the duty to keep the whole roadway in repair.¹² In general the extent of the company's duty, in so far as the part of the streets to which it extends is concerned, depends on the terms of the governing statute, ordinance, or contract,¹³ and various terms describing such part have been the subject of judicial construction.¹⁴

Substitution of single for double track. While the right of a street railroad company to narrow its obligation as to the extent of a street which it must keep in repair, by the substitution of a single track for double tracks under authority duly conferred by the municipality, has been recognized,¹⁵ notwithstanding the right of a street railway company to remove double tracks and establish a single track, it may not, after its obligation to pave has been fixed by existing double tracks, and after the municipality has put in its share of the paving, change its tracks, and thereby avoid a portion of the contract obligation.¹⁶

§ 118. — Extension of Line and of Boundaries of Municipality

The duty of a street railroad company to keep in repair and pave the part of the streets occupied by its tracks may apply to extensions of its line or where the boundaries of the municipality have been extended to include a street on which the company's tracks are laid.

A municipal ordinance requiring any street railroad company operating a line within the corporate limits to keep in good repair all that part of the street occupied by its tracks includes additional tracks to be laid, as well as those already laid and under operation,¹⁷ and a specific provision of an agreement between a municipality and the company as to the cost of paving, that the agreement shall be applicable to extensions, will be given effect.¹⁸ Where an extension is authorized by an amendment to the original act, such extension is subject to the obligations contained in such original act as amended, including the duty to pave, although the amendatory statute, permitting the construction of the tracks in the street in question, contains no provision for repair or paving;¹⁹ but where the extension is authorized by a subsequent independent ordinance, which does not refer to, or incorporate into itself, the terms of the original ordinances, and which makes no provision as to paving, the extension is not required to be paved.²⁰ Where a grant of a franchise for an extension can only be made subject to the restrictions of the municipal charter as to repairing and paving the streets, such extension is subject to the charter regulation, although the existing line is operated under a legislative act exempting it from paving.²¹

Extension of boundaries of municipality. The duty of a street railroad company to pave certain portions of the street may include a street which is included in the boundaries of a municipality after the company's track was laid in such street,²² but the authority of the municipality to require the company to bear the expense of repairs or improvements, not rendered necessary by wrongful acts of the company, has been denied where the street involved was one in which the railroad had been built, and the street itself dedicated, with reservation of the right to locate the tracks by a predecessor of the company, before the street had been included within the boundaries of the municipality.²³

§ 119. — Bridges

- a. In general
- b. Apportionment of cost and contribution

a. In General

Street railroad companies using a bridge may be required to assume the cost of repairs and alterations rendered necessary by such use, and it has been held that there is a common-law duty to repair.

Local authorities may require, as a condition of their consent to the use of a bridge by a street railroad company, that the company shall assume the cost of repairs and alterations rendered necessary by such use,²⁴ and there is authority for the view that there is a common-law duty to repair.²⁵ A company may be under a duty in respect of the maintenance and repair of a bridge on which its tracks are located notwithstanding a concurrent, but independent, duty of another corporation in respect thereof.²⁶ The extent of the duty imposed depends on the terms of the controlling statute,²⁷ franchise,²⁸ or contract,²⁹ and while, where an ordinance grants the right to lay street railroad tracks on the streets and bridges of a city, but in terms imposes the duty to repair only as to streets, it has been held that the company is not bound to keep in repair bridges crossed by its tracks,³⁰ the view has been taken that, under a statute or ordinance imposing on a street railroad company duties as to the repair of paving of streets or highways, and making no reference to bridges as distinguished from streets or highways, bridges are regarded as parts of such streets or highways.³¹

Bridge privately maintained. A street railroad company may have a duty to maintain a bridge, the general burden of maintaining which is on a private individual or another corporation.³²

b. Apportionment of Cost and Contribution

A street railroad company may be required to contribute to the expense of rebuilding or repairing a bridge used by it.

Even in the absence of express words imposing the obligation in the statute under which a street railroad company has the right to use a bridge, it has been held that such company is bound to contribute to the expense of rebuilding a public bridge, necessitated by the operation of heavier cars propelled by electricity.³³ Where a street railroad company's right to use a bridge is subject to revocation, the authority of the legislature to authorize municipal authorities to condemn and remove the bridge and to impose on the company the duty to pay part of the cost of constructing a new bridge as a condition of the company's use of the new bridge has been upheld.³⁴ An agreement between a street railroad company and a municipal officer by which the company is to make certain improvements on a bridge, for which the municipality and the railroad company are to share the cost, is not binding on the municipality where such officer is not authorized to make such contract.³⁵ A municipality may not recover from a street railroad company a share of the cost of building a new bridge to replace another bridge where it appears that the new bridge was paid for by a third person and not by the municipality.³⁶ Where the duty of keeping a bridge in repair rests primarily on a railroad company, and a duty to keep in repair that portion of the bridge within its rails rests on a street railway company, the railroad company is entitled to recover contribution from the street railroad for repairs made without notice to the latter.³⁷

Authority of public utility commission in general.

Certain statutes conferring powers on state public utility boards or commissions authorize such boards or commissions to apportion the cost of rebuilding or repair between the company and the municipality involved.³⁸ The jurisdiction of the commission in this respect is, however, limited by the statute conferring authority,³⁹ and under some statutes the commission has no jurisdiction to apportion the expenses of repairs to a highway bridge which have already been made, in accordance with a contract between the municipality and a street railroad company whose road crosses the bridge,⁴⁰ the remedy of the municipality being one for breach of contract enforceable in the courts.⁴¹ Under some statutes the exercise of discretion by the commissioners in determining the apportionment of the cost between a company and a municipality is conclusive, unless manifestly illegal or unjust.⁴²

In view of a statute enacted by virtue of the police power of the state, giving the Public Service Commission exclusive powers with respect to the construction of bridges and apportionment of costs, it has been held that a private contract between a street railway company and a county for the use of a bridge, under which the county agreed to bear replacement costs, was subject to an implied condition that the lawful exercise of the police power might take place any time, and the parties concerned might be required to pay their proper share,⁴³ and, accordingly, even though such contract was valid when made, the street railroad company may be liable for its share of the cost of the replacement of the bridge.⁴⁴

Measure of contribution and matters considered. The measure of contribution for the cost of a new bridge on the part of a street railroad company ordinarily is the amount of the increased expense rendered necessary to accommodate the street railroad traffic on the bridge,⁴⁵ that is, the amount fairly expended by the municipality because of the company's use of the bridge;⁴⁶ and the amount actually expended by the municipality is not necessarily controlling in determining the amount of the company's contribution.⁴⁷

Under a statute requiring a street railroad company to pay so much of the expense of the construction of a new bridge to replace another bridge as may be equitable, what is equitable in a given case is what is fair and just under the circumstances,⁴⁸ and while under such statute a municipality which erects a bridge may not go beyond the public and street railway requirements, and compel the company to pay any part of the cost not needed for public and railway requirements, the municipality may provide for future as well as present railway and public needs;⁴⁹ in such case benefit to, and use by, the railway of the bridge, present and prospective, are decisive factors in fixing its equitable portion of the expense, and, since the apportionment between the company and the municipality must be made once only, the prospective and present use of the bridge by the company must be regarded, and various other matters considered.⁵⁰

Recovery by railroad company. The right of the railroad company to enforce against the municipality a claim for the share of the cost of rebuilding a bridge, apportioned to the municipality by a state public utility commission, has been recognized.⁵¹

Matters properly considered

In apportioning the cost of a new bridge between a city and a street railway company under such statute, the following matters, among others, may properly be considered: The additional cost of strengthening the entire bridge so as to carry the load of cars operated over the tracks ordered by the public utilities commission; the increased size of the bridge due to provision for the tracks; the part of the surface of the bridge occupied by the company in the operation of its cars and the right of exclusion of other traffic when required for its own use; the permanent occupation of the bridge by the railway by its tracks, poles, wires, and equipment; the insurance of permanency in the installation of the railway's overhead equipment on the bridge; the special construction required for the company's exclusive service; the relative use of the part of the bridge devoted to railway traffic by the railway and by the other traffic; the permanency of the bridge and the cost of its maintenance and depreciation on the investment; the impaired life cost of the bridge due to the railway; the saving to the railway in the maintenance and cost of operation; the decrease in liability for accident owing to the increased width of bridge and draw; the relief from congestion due to the increased width of the draw; and the saving of time in operation of cars by the change from a swinging to a lift draw.—Appeal of City of Norwalk, supra.

Matters not properly considered

In fixing the amount which, under such statute, the company must pay, the cost to it of paving, rails, ties, ballast, wires, cables, and other special work, must not be considered, nor must a contribution to the cost of the new bridge made by the state be considered.—Appeal of City of Norwalk, supra.

commissions have been applied in proceedings involving the apportionment of the cost of repairing or replacing a bridge between a street railroad company and a municipality.⁵² The burden is on a county claiming contribution to the cost of a bridge from a street railroad company to show the amount which had been expended to accommodate trolley traffic in excess of what would have been necessary to accommodate other traffic only, where the municipality had sole control of the construction of the bridge.⁵³ The complaint in an action by a municipality to recover from a street railroad company a share of the cost of building a new bridge to replace another bridge is insufficient where it fails to show that the municipality has expended, or is bound to expend, any amount for the construction of the new bridge.⁵⁴

§ 120. — Change of Grade

The common-law duty of a street railroad company to keep its tracks in such condition that the street will be safe for travel requires it to restore the street, on a change of grade, and to make its tracks conform to all changes of grade, and this duty may be expressly imposed by statutes, ordinances, franchises, or contracts.

The common-law duty of a street railroad company to keep its tracks in such a condition that the street will be safe for travel requires it to restore the street, on a change of grade,⁵⁵ and to make its tracks conform to all changes of grade.⁵⁶ Furthermore, under the express provisions of some statutes, ordinances, franchises, or contracts, it is the duty of the company to maintain the tracks or roadbed in conformity with the grade of the street,⁵⁷ or to make the tracks or railroad conform to changes of grade;⁵⁸ and, where a requirement to make "tracks" conform exists, it is implied that the company will change the grade of its roadbed whenever that is necessary to adjust the track to the changed grade of the street.⁵⁹ Where an interurban railway fails or refuses to lower its tracks to conform to a change of grade in the improvement of a road or street under a statute, it has been held that the commissioners of the county in which such improvement is situated may contract for the lowering of such tracks and assess the cost thereof against the railway company.⁶⁰ Ordinarily, however, the company is not bound to grade the street on either side of its tracks to the height of its roadbed.⁶¹

A municipality may be authorized by statutes to require a change of grade of the railroad,⁶² as, for example, by statutes conferring on certain municipal boards or officers authority as to change of grades of streets,⁶³ or as to paving and the laying or relaying of surface railroad tracks.⁶⁴ Under some statutes the expense of altering the grade of a highway at the request of a street railroad company, for the purpose of establishing the grade of its railroad, includes the damage to abutting owners resulting from such alteration.⁶⁵ A change of grade at the crown of the street to an unstated amount is not a change of grade in the sense contemplated by statute.⁶⁶

Authority of state boards. Under some statutes the state roads commission is not empowered to require a street railroad company to make changes in the grade of its road, at its own expense, rendered necessary by improvements made by the commission,⁶⁷ and the commission may not impose liability on the company by virtue of the fact that a municipality might have required the company to make its tracks conform to a change of grade made by such municipality.⁶⁸ A municipality is not required to obtain the consent of the public service commission to make a slight and inconsequential change in the grade of its existing street intersections in a street occupied by a street railroad, rendered necessary before paving the street, especially where the railroad company is under contract to make the grade of its track conform to that of the street as the municipality may establish it.⁶⁹

§ 121. — Restoration of Streets after Removal of Tracks

The duty of a street railroad company or one claiming under it to restore streets on removal of tracks therefrom after the expiration or forfeiture of the franchise has been recognized.

While it has been held that one who acquires title to the rails of a street railroad, who is not the grantee, or purchaser, of the franchise, is not subject to the terms of the franchise which requires that on removal of rails the street shall be left in as good condition as before the removal was made,⁷⁰ there is authority recognizing that the duty to restore streets on the removal of tracks therefrom, after the expiration or forfeiture, of the franchise, rests on a street railroad company,⁷¹ or one claiming under it,⁷² and contract provisions imposing the duty must be given effect.⁷³ Moreover, the duty rests on the company, even though the abandonment of the street car system was not formally approved by the public service commission.⁷⁴

§ 122. — Existing, Original, and Subsequent Pavement

Under some circumstances, depending on the provisions of the controlling statute, ordinance, or grant, a street railroad company may be required to pay for existing, original, or subsequent pavement.

While a statute which contemplates the imposition of a share of the cost of an improvement in a certain street when such improvement is made does not authorize the municipality, after the improvement is made and has been paid for and after a street railroad company has, with the consent of the municipality and subsequent to the improvement, laid down a second track in such street, to charge the company with a share of the cost of such improvement,⁷⁵ under some statutes a street railroad, before the laying of its tracks, is required to pay the value of the pavement on a specified portion of the street where such street is not then being repaved.⁷⁶

Original pavement. Certain statutes and municipal grants have been construed to require street railroad companies to lay pavement where no pavement had previously been laid.⁷⁷

Subsequent pavement. Whether or not the duty of the street railroad company is a continuous duty depends on the construction of the controlling statute, ordinance, or contract.⁷⁸

§ 123. — Necessity, Character, and Type of Repairs and Improvements

- a. In general
- b. Conforming to changed conditions and to general condition of street, and kind of pavement
- c. Determination by public authorities as to necessity and character

a. In General

The character of the repairs and improvements required by a particular statute, ordinance, or contract depends on its terms, as determined from the common and ordinary use and meaning of the words and phrases employed.

The character of the repairs and improvements required by a particular statute, ordinance, or contract depends on its terms⁷⁹ and, where a franchise contract uses words and phrases of common and ordinary use and meaning in street improvement, such use and meaning will be adopted by courts in the construction of such contract.⁸⁰ While it has been held or recognized that a street railroad company, bound to "repair" or "keep in repair" a specified portion of the streets occupied by its tracks, is not thereby bound to pave, or to pay for paving,⁸¹ or otherwise to improve, the street,⁸² except in so far as the work in question comes within the category of repairs,⁸³ and that the duty to "maintain" pavement does not include the construction of pavement,⁸⁴ in order that the duty to pave or to pay therefor may be imposed, it is not necessary that the governing statute, ordinance, or contract should contain a specific reference to paving,⁸⁵ and statutory and other requirements to repair have been construed to include the duty to pave, under certain circumstances,⁸⁶ as, for example, a requirement to keep "in proper repair,"⁸⁷ "in good repair,"⁸⁸ "in thorough repair,"⁸⁹ and "in permanent repair,"⁹⁰ under the supervision of, when required by, and in the manner prescribed by, local authorities.

"Repair" of pavement. The word "repair," with respect to the repair of pavement, is inherently local and somewhat temporary,⁹¹ and is usually made necessary by some local disturbance or defect in pavement.⁹² The duty to "repair" pavement may involve the use of new material⁹³ and includes the duty to restore.⁹⁴

"Repave." The word "repave" relates generally to a new pavement out of the same or different material for the full width of the street theretofore similarly improved, or for some defined section thereof.⁹⁵

Items included. The items, in respect of which a railroad company's duty or obligation is imposed, are determined by the terms of the controlling statute, grant, or contract, as, for example, in respect of preliminary work,⁹⁶ excavations,⁹⁷ and the base for the tracks.⁹⁸

Repairs or restoration rendered necessary by excavations. The duty of a street railroad company to keep streets in repair unequivocally imposed by a grant from a municipality includes the duty to make repairs to pavement rendered necessary by lawful acts of the municipality in making excavations in the performance of its public duties, in the absence of any exception in this regard.⁹⁹ So, a statutory provision requiring street railroad companies to keep in permanent repair a certain portion of the street has been construed as requiring the railroad company to restore the pavement where its removal is rendered necessary by excavations required in the making of public improvements.¹

b. Conforming to Changed Conditions and to General Condition of Street, and Kind of Pavement

The duty to repair or pave is generally imposed with respect to public changes and to improved methods of street construction, and involves the duty to lay new and improved pavement conforming to that in the remainder of the street where the pavement in that portion of the street to which the duty of a street railroad company extends is out of repair.

In general the duty to repair² or to pave³ is imposed with respect to public changes and to improved methods of street construction. While the view has been taken that the duty to repair does not require a railroad company to repave with new material, or to make its pavement conform to new pavement, whenever the municipality paves the remainder of the street with improved pavement,⁴ where the existing pavement does not need repair or mending,⁵ it has been held or recognized that the duty to repair involves the duty to lay new and improved pavement conforming to that in the remainder of the street where the pavement in the portion of the street to which a company's duty extends is out of repair,⁶ even in the absence of an express provision in the governing statute, ordinance, or contract, for conformity.⁷ A statutory requirement that street railroad companies shall keep in permanent repair a certain portion of streets, under the supervision of, whenever required by, and in such manner as is prescribed by, local authorities, requires the laying of new and improved pavement conforming to that in the remainder of the street, even in the absence of a specific provision for such conformity,⁸ and a like rule has been recognized in respect of other statutory or ordinance requirements not specifically imposing the duty to pave.⁹

A specific requirement to pave ordinarily involves the duty of conformity,¹⁰ and valid requirements in terms imposing the duty to conform must be given effect;¹¹ in such case the railroad company may not be authorized¹² or required¹³ to lay down a pavement different from that laid in the remainder of the street.

Under a contract between a municipality and a street railroad company imposing on the latter the cost of paving or repaving a certain portion of streets occupied by the company if any paved or unpaved street occupied by a track or tracks should be ordered paved or repaved, the company is not primarily liable for a more expensive kind of pavement for that part of a street for which it is chargeable than that ordered for the entire street.¹⁴ According to some cases a provision in an ordinance granting the use of streets as to the kind of material to be used by a street railroad in paving between its tracks is a regulation and not a contract,¹⁵ and a practical construction placed on it by the municipality is immaterial.¹⁶

c. Determination by Public Authorities as to Necessity and Character

Ordinarily the necessity of repairing or repaving streets, and the character of the material to be used, are to be determined by the municipal authorities.

Ordinarily the necessity of repairing or repaving streets is to be determined by the municipal authorities,¹⁷ and, according to some cases, the determination may be made in the exercise of the police power.¹⁸ A provision of a contract between a municipality and a street railroad company that the company shall keep in permanent repair a certain portion of the street, under the direction, supervision, and approval of, specified municipal officers, is controlling in respect of the particular officers who may act under the contract.¹⁹

The municipal authorities usually may determine the material with which the paving shall be done,²⁰ unless restricted by some legislative provision,²¹ and may require it to be done with a better and more expensive material than was in use when the company was chartered or the grant of, or consent to, the use of the street was made,²² and, while there is authority for the view that, where the materials to be used for paving are specified in the controlling contract or ordinance, the municipality may not require the use of different material,²³

according to some cases, notwithstanding an agreement as to the material to be used, the municipality may require the use of different material,²⁴ in reasonably exercising the police power,²⁵ and the power of the legislature to require the use of other material has been recognized.²⁶

While it has been held that, where the municipality is acting under certain statutory provisions, the company has no constitutional right to be heard on the question as to whether the requirement of the proper local authorities to lay a new and improved pavement is reasonable, since the obligation of the company is imposed as a mere condition of its use of the streets and as compensation to the city therefor,²⁷ there is authority for the view that there must be some showing as to the necessity for repairs or paving,²⁸ that the discretion of the municipal authorities in this regard is not an arbitrary one,²⁹ but must be reasonably exercised,³⁰ that whether it has been so exercised is for the jury to determine under all the facts, where the controversy involves submission to a jury,³¹ and that an actual determination in some form by municipal authorities that the street is out of repair must be made in order to impose the duty to repair.³²

Public utility commission or board. Under some statutes state public utilities boards or commissions are vested with authority in respect of the necessity and character of repairs or improvements,³³

as, for example, authority to determine as to the necessity or character of repairs or rebuilding of bridges occupied by street railroads.³⁴ It has been held, however, that while a municipality and a street railroad company may not, by an agreement as to the necessity for certain repairs to a bridge, deprive the state commission of its authority to determine as to the necessity of other repairs,³⁵ the statute conferring authority on such commission does not prevent the municipality and the company from making a binding agreement as to the necessity for certain repairs.³⁶ In some jurisdictions a street railroad company is authorized, on being denied by the municipal authorities the right to lay a particular kind of pavement, to appeal from such order to the railroad commissioners.³⁷

§ 124. Termination of, and Exemption from, Duty

- a. In general
- b. Release from duty
- c. Statutes, ordinances, or contracts imposing other obligations
- d. Insolvency and financial hardship

a. In General

The duty of a street railway company to repair or pave the portion of the street occupied by its tracks may terminate with the revocation of its license to occupy the street or with the abandonment of its franchise or the removal of its tracks; and the legislature or municipality may exempt it from its duty under some circumstances.

Since the duty of a street railroad company to pave is coextensive with the existence of its street franchise,³⁸ if its license to occupy the street with its tracks is revoked by the city, the corresponding duty to pave necessarily terminates.³⁹ So, also, the right of a street railroad company to abandon its franchise in order to avoid the duty to repair or to pave imposed by statute has been recognized,⁴⁰ although it has been held that a street railway company that is under contract to maintain and operate a street railway in a city cannot, without the consent of the city, avoid the payment of a paving assessment duly made by the city by tendering the city its street railway lines, property, and franchise,⁴¹ and that the surrender of its franchise and acceptance of an indeterminate permit under the Public Service Commission Law does not exempt a company from its obligation.⁴² A statute imposing the duty to repair as long as the company shall use or maintain the tracks has no application after the conveyance of the tracks to the city;⁴³ and, where the company has the right to remove its tracks from a street, it can, on such removal, be in no way liable for the improvement of such street.⁴⁴ Where, however, a resolution of the board of public works apportioning costs of a grade separation as authorized by statute was adopted while the street railroad company still had tracks at the intersection, and the company removed the tracks after it had received notice of the adoption of the resolution but before its confirmation, the company is liable for its share of the cost of the improvement.⁴⁵ In order to remove its tracks for the purpose of avoiding its obligation to repair or pave, the company must follow the required procedure.⁴⁶

The fact that the occupation of the street is terminable on certain contingencies, which may happen at any time, and at the will of the municipality, does not, however, destroy the obligation of the company to keep in repair as long as it occupies the street.⁴⁷ Where a statutory duty to repair has become fixed by proper notice from the municipal authorities, the railroad company may not, by subsequently renouncing or abandoning its franchise, avoid the duty so imposed.⁴⁸ A duty to repair or pave imposed by statute remains regardless of the fact that the tracks have been relocated in the same street,⁴⁹ or of the mere fact that the tracks were removed for the purpose of permitting the construction of a sewer and have not been relaid,⁵⁰ and difficulty in procuring labor and material is not a legal excuse for the failure of a street railroad company to perform its obligation to make its tracks conform to grade and to repave.⁵¹

Exemption. While the legislature may exempt a street railroad company from requirements as to repairs and paving,⁵² including requirements of a general statute,⁵³ and exemptions contained in municipal ordinances have been given effect,⁵⁴ the power of municipal authorities to exempt street railroad companies from the obligation to pave or to pay therefor has been denied.⁵⁵ A municipality may not, it has been held, contract away its authority to impose on a street railroad company the obligation to pave a certain portion of the street.⁵⁶ Under a statutory provision that the municipality shall reserve the right to require street railroad companies to pay the cost of paving or otherwise improving a certain portion of the streets occupied by its tracks, it has been held that, while the municipality may not surrender the right to require such payment,⁵⁷ and such reservation is read into a contract franchise by necessary implication,⁵⁸ the municipality has discretion to enforce or not to enforce the reserved right as it chooses.⁵⁹

It is generally recognized that provisions exempting a street railroad company from the cost of paving are not lightly to be read into a contract between the state and the company,⁶⁰ and any doubt in respect thereof must be resolved in favor of the state.⁶¹ Like rules of construction have been applied to a municipal ordinance granting the right to use streets for street railroad purposes,⁶² and the duty of a street railroad company to keep streets in repair unequivocally imposed by a grant from the municipality is not subject to exceptions not declared in terms equally unequivocal.⁶³

In determining the effect of ordinances which, it is claimed, grant exemptions from duties as to paving or repairs, the facts and circumstances surrounding the adoption of the ordinance,⁶⁴ and prior ordinances dealing with the matter,⁶⁵ may be considered, and all parts of the ordinance must be examined and considered.⁶⁶ An exemption of a street railroad company from the duty to pay for the cost of paving, under a contract between the company and the state, is not transferred to another company by a lease, authorized by statute, of the property, franchises, rights, and privileges from the contracting company to such other company,⁶⁷ especially where such exemption is inconsistent with the charter of the lessee company.⁶⁸

b. Release from Duty

- (1) By state
- (2) By municipality

(1) By State

The legislature may relieve a street railroad company of its duty to repair or pave that portion of the street occupied by its tracks.

The legislature which imposes the duty to pave may also relieve from such duty,⁶⁹ and it may relieve from duties as to paving and repairs imposed by a municipality as a condition of using streets.⁷⁰ Various statutes have been construed as not relieving the street railroad company of its duties to pave or repair;⁷¹ and under a recital in a deed by which certain corporations surrendered to the state the right to operate a road as a turnpike that, as part of the consideration, the state released every duty or obligation of such companies to keep and maintain in good order and repair such turnpike, the release applies only to that part of the turnpike other than the part on which there was a street railroad owned or operated by one of the grantors, the right to the continued operation of which was reserved.⁷²

Public utility boards. Statutes defining the powers of state public utility boards or commissions have been construed as not authorizing such boards or commissions to relieve street railroad companies from the obligation to pave or to repair imposed by agreements with, or franchises granted by, municipalities,⁷³ or from obligations imposed by a company's charter.⁷⁴

(2) By Municipality

Except as authorized by the legislature, municipal authorities have no power to relieve a street railroad company from the provisions of a statute requiring it to pave or repair certain portions of streets or bridges occupied by its tracks.

Municipal authorities have no power to relieve a street railroad company, by contract or otherwise, from the provisions of a statute requiring street surface railroad companies to pave or repair certain portions of streets occupied by the companies' tracks,⁷⁵ or to reconstruct and repair the paving or flooring of certain portions of bridges so occupied,⁷⁶ unless authorized in that regard by the legislature.⁷⁷ Under authority duly conferred by the legislature, however, a municipality may by contract with a street railroad company relieve the latter from duties as to repairs and paving.⁷⁸

a street occupied by a street railroad, and to maintain such pavement for a specified time, the railroad company to be assessed a certain proportion of the cost, the latter is thereby relieved from its obligation to keep streets in repair imposed by the ordinance consenting to the construction of the railroad,⁷⁹ and by a general statute.⁸⁰ An ordinance for a street improvement, requiring a street railway company to furnish rails and other track appliances, which are not a part of the street construction, is not a waiver by the city of its right to demand the construction by the railway company of part of the street.⁸¹ Where an obligation of a street railroad company is joint in respect of several municipalities, one such municipality, acting independently of the other interested municipalities, may not release the railroad company from the latter's obligation.⁸²

Failure to require performance and practical construction of ordinance or contract. While it has been held that a municipality may omit to enforce a contract between it and a street railroad company requiring the latter to replace and keep in repair the pavement on a certain portion of the street,⁸³ even as against abutting owners,⁸⁴ there is authority to the contrary,⁸⁵ and it has been held that, where, by a contract between the street railroad company and a municipality, under which the municipality has received a substantial consideration, the municipality assumes the company's obligation as to repairs and paving, the burden of such obligation may not be imposed on abutting owners.⁸⁶

The mere fact that a municipality has not on all occasions required performance by a street railroad company of the latter's duties as to maintenance and repairs does not release the company from such duties,⁸⁷ and, where duties as to repairs and paving have been imposed on a street railroad company by a contract or franchise agreement, it may not be released from such duties by an alleged practical construction of the agreement by the parties, indicating that such duty did not exist,⁸⁸ at least where the acts of the municipality, relied on to show such practical construction, are independent of, and not done pursuant to, the contract in respect of which the practical construction is alleged.⁸⁹ A street railroad company is not released from its duty imposed by a municipal ordinance to maintain and keep in repair a portion of a bridge occupied by its tracks by the fact that by another and independent ordinance the duty to maintain and repair the whole bridge is imposed on another corporation.⁹⁰

Wrongful acts or omissions of municipality. Notwithstanding certain wrongful acts or omissions on the part of the municipality, it has been held that the duty of a street railroad company to repair or pave remains,⁹¹ especially where, prior to such acts of the municipality, the track area was out of repair and did not conform to the grade of the adjacent street.⁹²

Amendatory or supplementary ordinances. While an amendatory ordinance, which, when its terms are duly accepted by the street railroad company, constitutes a contract supported by a consideration, may release the company from obligations as to improving the street,⁹³ amendments of, or supplements to, ordinances which impose duties as to repairs or paving will not be construed to relieve a street railroad company from such duties in the absence of language in the subsequent ordinance showing an intention so to relieve the company.⁹⁴

Under some circumstances a street railroad company may be relieved from its duty to repair or pave by statutes, ordinances, or contracts imposing other obligations in lieu thereof, such as the payment of a specified amount, or a tax.

Under some statutes street railroad companies are made subject to a tax in lieu of the duty to repair,⁹⁵ but the obligation to repair or pave voluntarily assumed by a street railroad company in consideration of the right to use public streets does not, according to some cases, impose a tax within the meaning of a taxing statute providing that the tax therein provided for shall be in lieu of all franchise taxes.⁹⁶ While the authority of a municipality, under legislative sanction to enter into a binding contract with a street railroad company for the payment of a specified amount annually by the company in lieu of paving by the company, has been recognized,⁹⁷ in the absence of legislative authorization, the power of the municipality in this regard has been denied,⁹⁸ and a contract between a railroad company and a municipality for the payment by the railroad company of a lump sum and a percentage of its annual gross receipts in lieu of certain taxes and of all money demands or charges whatever has been so construed as not to relieve a railroad company from its duty to repair portions of the street occupied by it.⁹⁹

Provision of assessment for improvements. A contractual obligation to pave or to pay for paving has been treated as independent of, and not affected by, statutory provisions authorizing special assessments for local improvements,¹ and a statutory provision imposing liability on street railroad companies for the payment of a share of the cost of repairs or improvements made under an assessment plan does not relieve a company from the duty of repairing the portions of the street occupied by it where no assessment plan is adopted.²

A consolidated company is not relieved from the full liability as to repairs or paving imposed on one of its constituent companies by a contract between a municipality and another of the constituent companies, to which the first mentioned company was not a party, made before the consolidation, which provides for the payment of certain sums in lieu of the contracting company's obligation to repair and pave, where the statute under which the consolidation was made expressly provided that the act of consolidation shall not release the consolidated company from any of the restrictions, liabilities, or duties of the constituent companies.³

Insolvency or financial hardship does not relieve a street railroad company from its obligation to repair or pave the street occupied by its tracks as long as it continues to use the street.

As long as it continues to use the street in question, a street railroad company is not relieved from its obligation to repair or pave it by the fact that the cost of complying with the obligation will be more than was anticipated when the obligation was assumed,⁴ that the company is operating at a loss,⁵ is insolvent,⁶ or, in general, that the performance of its obligation will work financial hardship.⁷ A street railroad company may not, however, be required to continue indefinitely operations which will result in the exhaustion of its assets,⁸ and, while the state public utility board or commission, under some statutes, has no power to release the company from its obligations as to repairs or paving because of financial hardship where the company continues to use the street in question,⁹ and, in some states, may not allow an abandonment in order that the company may avoid the financial hardship imposed by its charter obligations,¹⁰ under some statutes such board or commission may permit a removal of the tracks under certain circumstances, in order to permit the company to avoid undue financial hardship.¹¹

§ 125. Notice and Demand by Municipality

Under some statutes notice to the company is not required in order to give rise to the duty to keep the street in repair, but it may be necessary to impose the obligation to pave or make general repairs or to use particular materials in paving.

Under some statutes imposing the duty to keep a street in repair, in respect of mere defects in that part of the street to which the duty appertains, notice to the company by municipal authorities is not necessary in order to give rise to the duty,¹² but notice is required in order to impose the obligation to pave or to make general repairs.¹³ Where, by statute, the pavement to be used in the portion of the street to be paved by the railroad company is to be in substantial conformity with that used in the remainder of the street, the notice to the company should conform to the statute in this regard.¹⁴

§ 126. Improvement or Repairs by Municipality at Company's Expense

- a. In general
- b. Opportunity to do work; notice and demand
- c. Amount of recovery

a. In General

Where the duty of repairing or paving the street occupied by it is imposed on a street railroad company, the municipality may, after notice to the delinquent company, cause the work to be done at the expense of the company and recover the cost thereof.

Where the duty of keeping in repair and repaving a street is imposed on a street railroad company occupying it, the municipality may, after notice to the delinquent company, cause the street to be repaired or paved at the expense of the company,¹⁵ even in the absence of a statute expressly so providing,¹⁶ and recover the cost thereof.¹⁷ Under some statutes, while the necessity for the use of the tracks, in order to impose liability for work done by the municipality, has been asserted,¹⁸ the liability arises from the conjunction of use, want of repair, and notice,¹⁹ regardless of the extent of the prior use²⁰ or of future prospective use,²¹ and no estoppel on the part of the municipality can affect a street railroad's duty under the statute when duly fixed.²²

Under an ordinance providing that, on failure of the company to keep in repair or to repave, the municipality, after notice may do such work and collect the cost thereof from the company, the municipality cannot compel the company to do the work.²³ The right of a municipality to recover from a street railroad company the cost of paving a certain portion of a street occupied by the company's track, on the assumption that the obligation to pave was imposed by the franchise for the use of the street, has been denied where the municipality has been fully reimbursed for the cost of such paving by the collection of assessments on abutting property, in levying which assessments the municipality had not exceeded its powers.²⁴

Performance of work as condition precedent. While ordinarily the company does not become liable for the cost of paving before the paving has actually been done,²⁵ in a suit to foreclose a mortgage on the property of a street railroad company, the court may properly direct that an amount sufficient to cover the cost of paving a certain portion of a street, in respect of which the duty to pave was assumed by the company under a contract, should be reserved out of the proceeds of sale of the railroad property for payment to the municipality on its completion of the paving.²⁶

Nature and form of proceeding. The right of a municipality to recover in an action at law for the expense of performing certain duties imposed on a street railroad company has been recognized.²⁷ Furthermore, it has been held that in an action by the contractor against the municipality, the company may be called in warranty, and cannot escape liability on the ground that there was no privity of contract between the contractors and the company because it did not sign the municipality's contract with the contractors.²⁸

Where no contract obligation is involved and the imposition by municipal authorities of conditions as to repairs is regarded as the exercise of a governmental function, the remedy, if any, for the recovery of the cost of repairs is in equity.²⁹ Under some enactments the municipality may acquire an enforceable lien on the franchises and tracks of a street railroad company for the cost of paving or repairing for which the company is liable,³⁰ and, under some statutes, the municipality may enforce liability for such cost either by suit in the ordinary form or by foreclosing a lien in the same

Action of contract

A municipality has the right to recover the cost of repairs, in an action of contract on the covenant of a street railroad company in an instrument under seal that, as long as the company shall operate certain extensions, it will save the city harmless from all loss by reason of the construction and operation of the extensions.—City of Northampton v. Priorities

(1) City was not entitled to priority over mortgagee of property of discontinued railway, to proceeds of sale of tracks taken from city streets on theory that railway's duty to repair was in nature of assessment liability, and city's performance of duty on railway's default entitled city to priority.—Standard Oil Co. of New

(2) Likewise, city was not entitled to priority in such case on theory that mortgagee could not equitably enforce lien without subordination of burden of maintenance of street placed on railway, since no duties of railway were assumed by mortgagee.—Standard Oil Co. of New York v. Nashua St. Ry., supra.

(3) City was, however, entitled under franchise ordinance to prior lien against property of street railway on account of expenditures on behalf of railway where ordinance was regularly passed and entered on the records and action of city antedated recording of bond mortgage.—Real Estate-Land Title & Trust Co. v. City of Springfield, 182 N.E. 501, 125 Ohio St. 531, appeal dismissed 53 S.Ct. 292, 287 U.S. 577, 77 L.Ed. 506.

Expense of removal of tracks

Incidental benefits received by mortgagee of railway property because of removal of tracks from city's streets after discontinuance of railway gave city no right to have mortgaged property charged with expense of removal, where mortgagee did not request city to remove tracks.—Standard Oil Co. of New York v. Nashua St. Ry., 189 A. 166, 88 N.H. 342.

manner as mortgages may be foreclosed.³¹ A statutory lien is lost if proceedings to enforce it are not employed as directed by the statute.³²

An execution, although regularly issued by a city for paving assessment, unless the power is so granted by the legislature, cannot be lawfully levied on the property of a street railway company that is being used by the company as part of its system in rendering service to the public.³³

b. Opportunity to Do Work; Notice and Demand

A street railroad company is entitled to an opportunity to repair or pave the street before the municipality can do it and recover therefor, and, accordingly, notice must usually be given to the company requiring it to do the necessary work.

While the view has been taken that a street railroad company obtaining the consent of a municipality to operate railways is chargeable with notice of its duty to keep pavements clean, as required by ordinance, without special notice or request from the city,³⁴ a company is entitled to an opportunity to perform the work of repairing or to improve a portion of a street or highway where the obligation so to do is imposed on it, before the municipality can do it and recover therefor,³⁵ and, to this end, notice must usually be given to the company requiring it or requesting it to do the necessary work.³⁶ The view has been expressed, however, that actual notice is not necessary,³⁷ and that the enactment and publication of an ordinance requiring the paving involved is constructive and sufficient notice to the company.³⁸

The fact that the municipality lets the contract to do the work within the time limited for the company to perform, but after notice is given, is not a defense to an action against the company for the cost of paving;³⁹ nor is it essential to the liability of the company that the notice shall precede the letting of the contract by the municipality for the work,⁴⁰ as long as the work is not commenced or done within the time limited for the company to do it.⁴¹

Notice need be given only to the company on whom the duty in question rests.⁴² While the notice should designate with reasonable accuracy the extent and type of work required,⁴³ and that the performance of the work is required,⁴⁴ it need not in all cases conform strictly to the requirements of the ordinance,⁴⁵ and usually it is sufficient if it is such as reasonably to inform the company on whom the duty in question rests of the character and extent of the work required,⁴⁶ and informalities or immaterial defects therein may be disregarded.⁴⁷

Company's waiver of notice and right to perform work. The company may waive such notice or lose its right to object to the lack of such notice,⁴⁸ or to the sufficiency of the notice given.⁴⁹ So, also, since the right to elect to make an improvement, or to pay therefor, is a privilege favorable to the company,⁵⁰ the company may waive its right to do the

A municipality which has made repairs or done paving which the street railroad company was bound, but neglected, to make or do, is entitled to recover the reasonable cost or value of the work, which is prima facie the exact sum expended in the work.

Where a municipality has made repairs or done paving which the street railroad company was bound, but neglected, to make or do, it is entitled to recover the reasonable cost of the work,⁵⁴ or, as sometimes stated, the reasonable value of the work.⁵⁵ While the obligation of the company is not measured by the amount actually expended by the municipality,⁵⁶ where no fraud is shown, or any facts to impeach the reasonableness of the account, the exact sum expended in the work is prima facie the sum which the municipality is entitled to recover,⁵⁷ and the propriety of permitting a recovery in accordance with the terms of the contract for the work made by the municipality on the so-called "cost-plus" plan has been recognized.⁵⁸ Extravagant amounts recklessly expended in the work without reference to its true value should not be allowed, as the municipality cannot proceed in a reckless or extravagant manner and charge the company for expenses unnecessarily or unreasonably incurred,⁵⁹ and the court has also refused to allow certain items which were not authorized by the municipal council.⁶⁰

Judicial admission. Where the company judicially admits that it had agreed with the city to pay for its share of paving work performed, and judicially admits the amount due, if the city is entitled to any judgment against the company, its obligations to the city are liquidated and fixed by such judicial admissions, irrespective of whether its franchise obligations are greater or less.⁶¹

Set-off or deductions. The right of the street railroad successfully to claim a set-off for alleged damages or loss resulting from the stoppage of its traffic, where such stoppage was reasonably necessary to permit the municipality to perform the work on the company's wrongfully refusing to perform it, has been denied,⁶² as has, it seems, the absolute right of the company to an allowance against the cost of repaving, for old material, originally laid by the company, on the theory that, when such old material was laid it became the property of the municipality;⁶³ and the right of a company, to the deduction of the amount of rent for the use of a bridge, paid under contract, in an action by the municipality to recover for certain expenditures has been denied.⁶⁴

Interest. A statute requiring the owner of street-car tracks to bear the paving expense should be construed to mean that, when a claim is presented and the owner knows how much that expense actually is, payment is due and interest accruing thereafter is to be included as a part of the expense to the city made necessary both by the neglect of the owner to pave after notice and the neglect to pay after knowledge of the amount due.⁶⁵

§ 127. Estoppel to Deny, or Loss of Right to Object to, Liability or Imposition of Obligation

A street railroad company may, under some circumstances, estop itself to deny liability for work done, or waive or lose its right to object to certain matters affecting its liability.

Where a street railroad company may be liable, under certain circumstances, for the cost of repairs or paving, it may, by standing by and permitting the work to be done, estop itself to deny liability for the work done,⁶⁶ even though the work is not done in strict accordance with the contract or ordinance,⁶⁷ and the company may by contract or agreement with the municipality waive or lose its right to object to certain matters affecting its liability,⁶⁸ including alleged departures from the terms of an ordinance otherwise applicable.⁶⁹

On the other hand, mere inaction on the part of the company after notice to it of a claim of a municipality that the company is liable for certain work, for which it is not actually liable, does not, it has been held, render the company liable, in the absence of any request by the municipality for action,⁷⁰ and, where the company is not liable, for payment of the cost of improvements made, it is not estopped to deny liability, although the municipal council has by ordinance attempted to make it liable therefor.⁷¹ So, also, an agreement by the company to be liable for certain work, for which otherwise it would not be liable, may not be made the basis of an implied agreement to assume liability for other work for which it is not liable;⁷² nor does the fact that a street railroad company complies with an order requiring it to lay and maintain paving within certain streets according to certain specifications estop it thereafter to contest the legality of the order.⁷³

§ 128. Company under Duty to Perform Obligations

The duty of a street railroad company to pave or repair streets may devolve on its successors, such as subsequent purchasers, lessees, or companies formed by consolidation or merger.

Charter restrictions and conditions as to repairing and paving the street or highway are ordinarily obligatory on any subsequent purchaser⁷⁴ or lessee⁷⁵ of the street railroad tracks and franchises, even without an express assumption. Such conditions are usually binding on a company formed by the consolidation or merger of the first and other companies,⁷⁶ and removal of the abandoned tracks and repavement of the streets at the expense of a street railway incorporated through merger may be ordered under a statute authorizing the public utilities commission to order abandonment of tracks pursuant to merger of street railways.⁷⁷ A statute imposing certain obligations on every surface street railroad company as long as it shall continue "to use any of its tracks" is not confined to a company which owns the tracks,⁷⁸ and includes a company operating over certain tracks as lessee,⁷⁹ but, if the lease has expired when the notice to repair is duly given, liability rests solely on the lessor.⁸⁰ It has been held that a lessee company is not subject to obligations as to repairs or improvements provided for by the statute under which such company was organized, in respect of a line which the company does not operate under such statute but in the right of the lessor company.⁸¹

C. RIGHTS IN, AND USE OF, TRACKS OF OTHER ROADS

§ 129. In General

In the absence of any valid statute or ordinance providing otherwise a street railroad company has no right to enter upon and use the tracks of another company without the latter's consent; and, in the absence of authority duly conferred or reserved, the municipality may not grant such right as against the objection of the company owning or controlling the tracks.

A street railroad company is subject to the limitations of its charter in respect of operation over tracks of other companies,⁸² and, in the absence of any valid statute or ordinance providing otherwise, a street railroad company has no right to enter upon and use the tracks of another company without the latter's consent,⁸³ and a company may exclude other companies from the use of its tracks.⁸⁴ So, also, in the absence of authority duly conferred or reserved, the municipality may not grant such right as against the objection of the company owning or controlling the tracks in question,⁸⁵ and the authority of the municipality in this respect is limited by the terms of the statute conferring such authority⁸⁶ or by the

It has been held or recognized, however, that such right may be acquired by virtue of an agreement between the companies, as discussed infra § 152, or it may be acquired by legislative authority,⁸⁸ by municipal authority, when the municipality is duly authorized,⁸⁹ or by virtue of an express reservation in the grant to the company⁹⁰ or in its charter,⁹¹ or it may result from such necessary implication from the grant that without it the grant itself would be defeated.⁹² The right to appropriate the joint use of the tracks of another company is not affected by a statute conferring the power on street railroad companies to make traffic agreements with other companies.⁹³ In order to protect the original company, the extent of track which may be thus occupied and used is sometimes limited to some fixed distance or some proportionate part of the total mileage of the second company.⁹⁴

Under some statutes or ordinances the right of a street railroad company to use the tracks of another company may be acquired without resorting to condemnation proceedings.⁹⁵ In other cases, however, it is held that the owning company has a private property in its tracks and their use, although devoted to a public purpose, of which it cannot be deprived without its consent, except by an authorized appropriation, in which it is entitled to have compensation therefor assessed by a jury.⁹⁶ In any case, in the absence of an agreement between the companies, the company which seeks the right must pursue the prescribed proceedings.⁹⁷

Where one street railroad company using another's tracks is required to make and maintain connections and pay switchmen, it is properly allowed to select and employ such switchmen.⁹⁸

Authority of public utility board. The authority to regulate the matter of the use of the tracks of one company by another is sometimes vested in state public utility boards or commissions.⁹⁹

Consent of municipal authorities. A grant to a street railroad company to operate its own lines on streets, subject to conditions and regulations, has been held not to confer on the company obtaining such franchise a right to permit other companies to use its tracks without municipal consent and against municipal protest.¹ A street railroad company which has, under power given by the legislature and the municipality, appropriated a right to use a portion of the tracks of another company, is not, however, thereby precluded from appropriating the right to use more of the tracks without obtaining an additional ordinance from the municipality.²

Consent of abutting owners. Under some statutes the consent of the abutting property owners to the construction and operation of one street railroad is not sufficient to authorize the use of the tracks by another company for the operation of its road, but such consent must be obtained for the operation of the second road.³ Under other statutes such consent seems not to be necessary.⁴

§ 130. Compensation

A company acquiring the right to use the roadbed and tracks of another company must make compensation for such use.

A company acquiring the right to use the roadbed and tracks of another company must ordinarily make compensation for such use.⁵ The mode and amount of such compensation may be fixed by contract between the companies;⁶ and in some jurisdictions it is held that, if there is no agreement between the companies as to the mode or amount of compensation, it must be fixed as in other instances of the condemnation of private property to public uses.⁷ In other jurisdictions the determination of the amount of compensation may devolve on the municipal authorities,⁸ appraisers,⁹ a state public utility board or commission,¹⁰ commissioners appointed by the court,¹¹ or on the court without the intervention of a jury.¹²

Measure of compensation. In the absence of any agreement, statute, or ordinance specifying the amount, the compensation to be allowed a street railroad company for the use of its tracks by another company should be a fair and full equivalent of the loss thus sustained.¹³ In estimating this amount there should be taken into consideration the value of the railroad structure and materials sought to be used,¹⁴ the cost of paving in conformity with the municipal ordinances,¹⁵ and the increased wear on the tracks, and expense in keeping them in repair;¹⁶ but no compensation should be allowed for interference with the franchise or profits of the company whose tracks are sought to be used.¹⁷

§ 131. Rights and Remedies

The use by one railroad company of the street or tracks occupied by another is not necessarily an invasion of the rights of the latter which will entitle it to relief, but an unauthorized interference with its tracks, franchise, or vested rights will give rise to a cause of action.

The fact that a street railroad company is about to lay its track in a street already occupied by another company with its tracks is not necessarily a threatened invasion of the easements of such other company or of its property rights, so as to entitle such other company to an injunction;¹⁸ and, when a street railroad company accepts its charter, or a renewal thereof, with the condition attached that the municipality may grant the right to use the tracks to any other company on such terms as the municipal council shall deem equitable, and the municipality has granted such right and prescribed the terms, the court will not interfere with them if they are reasonable,¹⁹ and the company, the use of whose tracks has been granted, cannot object because a part of its business will be taken away.²⁰

A street railroad company which has constructed, and is legally operating, a line of railroad in the streets of a municipality is possessed of such a property interest as to give it a legal right to maintain an action to restrain a similar company from using or interfering with its line of tracks, without authority of law;²¹ and likewise an injunction will issue to restrain a company in the occupation and use of the tracks of another company from interfering with the latter's franchise or vested rights.²² Where, however, one company has a lawful right to the use of the tracks of another company, the latter is not entitled to an injunction to restrain the exercise of such right, without alleging and proving such facts as clothe the courts with power to grant relief in the exercise of their equitable jurisdiction.²³ A municipality may not maintain a suit in equity to compel a street railroad to permit the use of its tracks by another company to which the municipality has granted such use under authority duly reserved.²⁴

Repair of tracks at joint expense. Where street railroad tracks owned by one company, and subject to the use of another company operating on the same street, become in need of repair, the latter company may by suit compel the former to reconstruct the tracks at joint expense.²⁵

D. CROSSING OR CONNECTION WITH OTHER RAILROADS

§ 132. Right to Cross

Street railroad companies have implied power to cross the lines of other companies, and one cannot enjoin such crossing by another; but if conditions precedent are provided for by statute, there must be compliance therewith.

Street and electric railroads have the same implied power, from the law authorizing their construction, to cross the lines of other street railroads as have commercial railroads,²⁶ and one street railroad company cannot enjoin such crossing by the other.²⁷ Under some constitutional or statutory provisions the right of a street railroad company to cross the tracks of another road is expressly provided for,²⁸ and there must be compliance with any conditions precedent therein specified.²⁹

§ 133. Mode of Crossing

The construction of a crossing of street railroads may be controlled by the courts, and there must be compliance with relevant statutory provisions.

Where the right to construct a crossing over the tracks of a street railroad company exists, a court of equity will control its construction and operation on the application of either party.³⁰ Under some statutes, the determination of the manner in which the crossing shall be made is vested in particular boards or commissioners,³¹ or in commissioners appointed by the court.³² Notice of the time and manner of the construction of a crossing must be given to a street railroad whose tracks will be crossed.³³

§ 134. Connections with Other Roads

Connections of the tracks of a street railroad with those of another railroad may be made as authorized by statutes.

Under some statutes connections or intersections of the tracks of a street railroad with those of another existing railroad are authorized;³⁴ and statutes authorizing or compelling connections or intersections of tracks between railroads have been held to apply to the intersection and connection of a street railroad operated by electricity with a steam railroad,³⁵ but not to the connection between a street surface railroad and an elevated railroad by an inclined plane, where the property owners have consented only to a surface road.³⁶ Such connections are usually required to be made with the consent of, and subject to the conditions imposed by, the city authorities.³⁷

§ 135. Compensation

On compliance with the prerequisites of statutes providing for the appointment of commissioners for the fixing of compensation to be paid a street railroad for the crossing of its tracks by another street railroad, an application for the appointment of such commissioners must be granted.

Although, as stated in Eminent Domain § 131, it has been held that a street railroad company may lay its tracks across a railroad or another street railroad without making compensation, some statutes

E. INJURIES FROM, OR INCIDENT TO, CONSTRUCTION OR MAINTENANCE

§ 136. In General

A street railroad company is liable for injuries sustained as a result of the negligent manner in which the work of constructing or maintaining the railroad is carried on.

A street railroad company will be held liable for injuries sustained by persons as a result of the negligent manner in which the work of constructing or maintaining the railroad is carried on.³⁹ When it engages in work on a public street, the company assumes a duty, imposed by law, of keeping that street in a reasonably safe condition while the work is in progress,⁴⁰ whether it is actually performing the work itself,⁴¹ or the work is being performed by an independent contractor.⁴² Hence the company is liable for injuries sustained by persons using the street or highway due to a dangerous condition negligently created by it,⁴³ and its liability exists even though the specific act complained of might have been committed by an independent contractor.⁴⁴

The company is bound to use the care which an ordinarily prudent and careful man would use to warn travelers in the street of the existence and danger of an excavation,⁴⁵ and in providing a right of way over private property as a temporary substitute for the highway which it had completely obstructed while constructing its road, the company is under a duty to keep and maintain the way so provided in a reasonably safe condition for public use;⁴⁶ but in repairing its tracks at a street crossing, the company is not required to anticipate and provide for unusual and extraordinary emergencies,⁴⁷ and it is sufficient for it to provide a crossing for ordinary and usual travel.⁴⁸

The company can only be held liable where the defect or condition causing the injury was one for which it was responsible;⁴⁹ thus it is not liable for

Maintenance of fence or barrier

(1) Where owners of realty adjacent to street conveyed it to railway company's agent and agent conveyed it to company by deeds stating that realty was to be used for highway purposes and for operation of street railway, but general public did not use realty for highway purposes, no care was taken of it, and it was rough and unfit for travel, company was not relieved of duty to maintain a fence on retaining wall constructed by company on realty.—Sawicki v. Connecticut Railway & Lighting Co., 30 A.2d 556, 129 Conn. 626.

(2) Where company filled in such realty to make it level with street and built a retaining wall, company had duty to build a protective barrier along edge of retaining wall to prevent pedestrians from falling off wall.—Sawicki v. Connecticut Railway & Lighting Co., supra.

(3) It was company's duty to maintain the fence, even though it removed its tracks and abandoned use of the realty under order of public utilities commission, and, hence, company was liable for injuries sustained by one who fell through the fence which had become unsafe.—*Sawicki v. Unavoidable result of constructing trackless trolley

injuries sustained by reason of defects resulting from an extraordinary storm,⁵⁰ until it had reasonable opportunity to remedy such defects.⁵¹

Contributory negligence. No recovery can be had against the railroad, where the injured person was guilty of contributory negligence.⁵² With respect to the question of contributory negligence, a statute requiring slow-moving vehicles to keep as closely as practical to the right-hand edge or curb of the roadway has no application where the center portion of the roadway is occupied by streetcar tracks which are being repaired, and the street, under the circumstances, is not sufficiently wide to permit two lines of traffic in the same direction to be maintained.⁵³

Proximate cause. In order to render a street railroad company liable for negligence in connection with the construction or repair of its tracks, the negligence must have been the proximate cause of the resulting injury;⁵⁴ there must be a causal connection between the conduct of the company and the accident before the question of the company's negligence can be considered.⁵⁵

Incidental interference with telephone company. A telephone company has no right to relief because of incidental interference by the construction or maintenance of an electric street railroad,⁵⁶ particularly where it took its franchise subject to the condition that it should not incommode the use of the streets by the public.⁵⁷

§ 137. Injuries to Road or Other Property

A street railway company may recover damages for the destruction of its tracks, poles, wires, and other property by a municipality.

A street railway company may recover damages for the wrongful destruction of its tracks, poles, wires, and other property by a municipality,⁵⁸ and the fact that the street was taken over by the state as a state highway does not relieve the municipality from its liability.⁵⁹

§ 138. Actions

The rules governing civil actions generally apply in actions against a street railroad for injuries resulting from the construction and maintenance of the road.

Except in so far as regulated by special statutory provisions, the rules governing civil actions generally, particularly in actions for injuries resulting from negligence, apply in actions against a street railroad for injuries resulting from the construction and maintenance of the road.⁶⁰ Thus, the petition or complaint must state facts constituting a cause less trolley on deeded street railway right of way was to cause more water to flow onto adjoining land, landowners would not be entitled to recover compensation therefor, or to injunction.—Anderson v. Knoxville Power & Light Co., 64 S.W.2d 204, 16 Tenn.App. 259.

Failure to light safety zone

Street railroad company was not liable for death of motorist's wife who was killed when automobile struck unlighted safety zone at night, where city had assumed obligation to light safety zone and had not been joined in action within time allowed by statute, in absence of evidence of negligence of street railroad company in other respects.—Reiners v. Pittsburgh Rys. Co., 188 A. 163, 324 Pa. 460.

Extinguishment of warning light

Mere fact that light on standard, placed to warn of work on track, went out immediately before accident which occurred when there had not been sufficient time to relight it was insufficient to establish street railroad's negligence.—Stewart v. Philadelphia Rapid Transit Co., 157 A. 37, 103 Pa.Super. 366.

G. MOTIVE POWER AND ROLLING STOCK

§ 142. Motive Power

- a. In general
- b. Steam
- c. Electricity
- d. Motorbusses
- e. Who may question right to use particular power

a. In General

The motive power to be used in the operation of a street railroad depends on the terms of the franchise, statute, or ordinance conferring the power to construct the road; and, under a general grant, any appropriate motive power may be used.

The motive power to be used in the operation of a street railroad depends on the terms of the franchise, statute, or ordinance conferring the power to construct the road.⁷⁴ Under a general grant of power to maintain and operate a street railroad, a corporation takes, by necessary and unavoidable implication, a right to use any force in the propulsion of its cars which may be fit and appropriate to that end, and which does not prevent that part of the public which desires to use the street, according to other customary methods, from having the free and safe use thereof.⁷⁵ Moreover, such a grant carries with it, at least in the absence of specific limitations or prohibitions,⁷⁶ the right from time to time to operate the road by new methods and motive powers developed in the progress of invention and experience.⁷⁷ Where, however, a statute specifies

the motive power to be used, the expression of that power may be construed to exclude any other.⁷⁸

b. Steam

Steam as a motive power may be used along the streets of a city by proper permission, but if it is prohibited, its use constitutes a nuisance.

Steam, as a motive power, may be used along the streets of a city by proper permission,⁷⁹ and in such case the use thereof cannot be abated as a public nuisance, even though it tends to the immediate annoyance of the public in general.⁸⁰ The use of steam as a motive power may, however, be prohibited expressly⁸¹ or impliedly,⁸² and if it is, its use constitutes a nuisance, constructive, if not actual,⁸³ especially in a thickly populated city.⁸⁴

Electricity may be used as the motive power where expressly or impliedly permitted by the franchise or charter of the street railroad company or statutes or ordinances relating thereto.

Whether or not a street railroad may use electricity as its motive power depends on the terms of the franchise or charter and statutes or ordinances relating thereto.⁸⁵ The company has the right to use electricity where the grant of power to construct and operate a street railroad is silent as to the motive power to be used,⁸⁶ or where it authorizes the use of any motive power whatever,⁸⁷ or steam, horse, or other power, as the city council may from time to time direct,⁸⁸ or any power other than that of locomotive.⁸⁹ Overhead wires may be used to supply the electricity⁹⁰ unless the use of such wires is prohibited expressly⁹¹ or impliedly.⁹² The fact that the use of electricity as a method of operating street railroads was unknown at the time the grant was made is immaterial,⁹³ unless the company was thereby limited to the use of such powers as were known at the time.⁹⁴

A street railway company authorized to use any motive power and means of traction sanctioned by the municipality has authority to operate motorbuses.

Although there is a verbal plausibility in the contention that a street railway corporation has no power to operate without rails, the contention is narrowly verbal and also ignores material words;⁹⁵ and since transportation is the end and rails and motive power are means, when new motive power makes rails unnecessary, power to furnish transportation is not lost.⁹⁶ A company authorized to use any motive power and means of traction sanctioned by the municipality or any improved motive power except steam has authority to operate motorbuses as a part of an integrated system of mass transportation comprising rail cars, trackless trolleys, and motorbuses.⁹⁷ A statute requiring municipal consent to the operation of autobuses on the street is not applicable to street railways operating such buses by authority of statute.⁹⁸

e. Who May Question Right to Use Particular Power

The right of a street railroad company to operate its cars by power other than that specified in its charter can be questioned only by the state or municipality with which its contract was made.

The right of a street railroad company to operate its cars by power other than that specified in its charter can be raised only by the state or city with which its contract was made, and is not subject to collateral attack in a private action to recover for injuries,⁹⁹ or in a proceeding by the company to enjoin private persons from cutting down its wires and poles.¹

§ 143. Change of Motive Power

A change in the motive power of a street railroad may be made by legislative authority.

A change by a street railroad to a motive power not covered by its franchise or charter generally requires legislative authority,² which may, however, be conferred by the local authorities to whom the power to authorize the change has been delegated.³ A street railroad company, which has complied with the requirements of law with respect to obtaining authority to change its motive power, becomes entitled to a permit to open the streets along

Statute held not unconstitutional

The statute providing that whenever the board of public utility commissioners has approved the substitution of trolley buses on any line of street railway the company may with the approval of such board utilize in lieu of such vehicles autobuses is not unconstitutional because persons who operate buses in competition with buses operated by street railway must obtain the approval of the municipality whereas the street railway company is not required to do so.—South Orange Ave. Independent Bus Owners Ass'n v. Board of Public Utility Commissioners, 66 A.2d 627, 4 N.J.Super. 191, affirmed N. J. Public Service Coordinated Transport v. Newark-Elizabeth Independent Bus Owners Ass'n, 69 A.2d 22, 3 N.J. 118.

its route for purposes necessary in making such change.⁴

Statutes authorizing street railroad companies to change their motive power usually require such companies first to comply with certain conditions, such as obtaining the consent of the local authorities⁵ and the owners of abutting property.⁶ It is, however, competent for the legislature to authorize a change of motive power without the consent of the local authorities,⁷ notwithstanding a constitutional provision that no law shall authorize the construction or operation of a street railroad without the consent of the local authorities.⁸ Where consent to a change of the motive power has been given by the local authorities where the consent of the property owners was not required, the change cannot be prevented by abutting property owners.⁹

Change to motorbusses. A municipality may consent to the use by a street railroad of busses for passenger service in lieu of streetcars running on fixed tracks, in order to meet changed conditions and improve service,¹⁰ but, where a general statute to permit these changes has been enacted by the legislature, local laws may not supersede it.¹¹ Under some statutes the change may be authorized or required by the public utility commission.¹² Where

Increase in fare

Provision of franchise, granted by city to street railway company, that company should operate busses propelled by gasoline, electricity, or other approved means, when reasonably necessary to improve and supplement its service upon all lines where street cars were then operated by the company under then existing grants or franchises, authorized the company to modernize its transportation system by completely substituting new and modern motor coaches for obsolete street cars in order to make transportation system more flexible than that furnished by the street cars, even though an increase in fare was put into effect on the installation of the new transportation equipment. —Cincinnati, N. & C. Co., 275 N.Y.S. 5, 242 App.Div. 300.

Powers reserved to people

(1) The section of city and county of Denver charter authorizing council to grant revocable licenses or permits in streets did not impliedly authorize the council to grant temporary rights with respect to temporary permits, such as right of tramway corporation to eliminate rail lines and operate trolley coaches or motorbuses on certain streets, in view of constitutional provision that no franchise relating to any street shall be granted except on vote of qualified taxpaying electors.—Berman v. City and County of Denver, 209 P.2d 754, 120 Colo. 218.

(2) The constitutional amendment, ratifying and validating all provisions of Denver charter not in conflict with such amendment, ratified and validated charter section reserving to people exclusive power to regulate public utility rates, so as to deprive council of power to enact ordinance authorizing tramway corporation to eliminate rail lines and operate trolley coaches or motorbuses on certain streets, and such ordinance is void.—Berman v. City and County of Denver, 209 P.2d 754, 120 Colo. 218.

Power of commission, and validity and effect of orders

(1) In view of statute prescribing its powers and jurisdiction railroad commission was held to have jurisdiction to allow substitution of bus service for streetcar service on certain street, when this was in public interest, provided street railway's obligation to furnish adequate transportation service to city was not impaired.—City of Columbia v. Tatum, 177 S.E. 541, 174 S.C. 366.

(2) Commission's order was legislative, and party adversely affected was entitled to judicial determination of its validity.—City of Columbia v. Tatum, 177 S.E. 541, 174 S.C. 366.

(3) Commission's power to change from streetcars to busses in contract for public transportation service cannot be questioned by private property owner who enjoys benefits of contract not as party thereto but only as member of public.—City of Columbia v. Tatum, 177 S.E. 541, 174 S.C. 366.

(4) Commission may change its orders, in absence of rights vested thereunder, since such orders are not res judicata in judicial sense.—City of Columbia v. Tatum, 177 S.E. 541, 174 S.C. 366.

(5) In action to review orders of commission, court would grant plaintiff city relief to which it was entitled without further delay, and terminate litigation.—City of Columbia v. Tatum, 177 S.E. 541, 174 S.C. 366.

the charter powers of the company include the power to operate motorbusses, a proposed plan of conversion of the system from trolley cars to motorbusses presents a business question within the power of the directors of the company and need not be authorized or approved by the stockholders.¹³

Leave to substitute busses for cars on a line already operated is not the granting of a new right or franchise to use the streets, but it is rather a modification of the old franchise permitting a change in the method of operation;¹⁴ and a company seeking to operate busses in substitution for cars upon tracks and supplemental thereto should be continued in the beneficial enjoyment of its franchise rights without an affirmative popular vote unless some right of the public is interfered with, and unless its affirmative servitude over the streets is increased.¹⁵

§ 144. Rolling Stock and Equipment

Only such vehicles may be used upon street railroad tracks as the special charter of the company or the general laws under which it is organized permit.

Only such vehicles may be used upon street railroad tracks as the special charter of the company or the general laws under which it is organized permit;¹⁶ but, in the absence of any requirement that the company use only cars which it owns, the company may contract for the use of the cars of another company which are of the type which the first company is authorized to use.¹⁷ So it may operate cars which are the property of a company which it has leased.¹⁸ A car-control device attached to a car becomes a part of the rolling stock.¹⁹ Under a statute creating a rapid transit commission, the term "equipment" has been given a much broader significance than it usually receives.²⁰ A car-control device attached to a car is within the term "equipment" used in a contract providing for the payment thereof.²¹

The term "carriage" does not embrace a street car.²²

§ 147. Leases

- a. In general
- b. Mode of exercise of power to lease
- c. Who may question validity of lease

a. In General

Although a street railway company may be authorized to lease the lines of another, generally a company cannot, without statutory authority, relieve itself of its charter obligations and duties by leasing its line to another company.

Although a street railway company may be authorized to lease the lines of another,⁵³ a company cannot, without statutory authority, relieve itself of its charter obligations and duties by leasing its lines to another company,⁵⁴ and so, in the absence of such authority, a lease by a company of all its franchises and property, thereby disabling itself to serve the public, is ultra vires and void.⁵⁵ Authority to make a lease is not to be implied from a general grant to a street railroad company of all powers necessary to the exercise of those expressly conferred.⁵⁶

Where municipal assent is required by a constitutional provision, a municipal ordinance authorizing the lease is a sufficient assent.⁵⁷ In the absence of any evidence it will be presumed that the requisite municipal assent was given.⁵⁸

58. Mo.—Chlanda v. St. Louis Transit Co., 112 S.W. 249, 213 Mo. 244.

Rights of dissenting stockholders. Power given to a street railroad corporation by its charter, or by the general act under which it is incorporated, to lease its property and franchises, enters into the agreement between its stockholders,⁵⁹ and so the making of a lease cannot be deemed to deprive a dissenting stockholder of his property without due process of law.⁶⁰ A lease at a guaranteed rental is not a fraud on minority stockholders where such rental does not appear to be inadequate;⁶¹ and the execution of a lease at a rental of a specified percentage of the valuation of the property is not a fraud on dissenting stockholders merely because it limits the annual dividends, no matter how great the earnings and profits of the system may become.⁶²

Rejection by receiver. Where a street railroad company has leased part of the line of another company and is bound to operate its trains over extensions and joint tracks, its receiver is not free to reject the lease which is indissolubly united with the extension certificate and joint-trackage agreement.⁶³

b. Mode of Exercise of Power to Lease

Where no particular mode is prescribed therefor, the power of a street railway company to lease may be exercised in the same manner as other general powers of the company, but the contract must be approved by the public service commission where such approval is required by statute.

Where no particular mode is prescribed for the exercise of a power given to a street railroad company to lease its property or franchises, such power may be exercised in the same manner as other general powers of the company, by the vote of a majority of the stockholders, or by the board of directors,⁶⁴ and unanimous consent of the stockholders is no more necessary to the validity of a lease than to that of any other corporate act.⁶⁵ The directors of a street railroad company, in making a lease of its franchises and property, will be presumed, in the absence of any evidence to the contrary, to have acted in good faith.⁶⁶ Where approval of the contract by the Public Service Commission is required by statute, administrative proceedings to obtain such approval must be had.⁶⁷

c. Who May Question Validity of Lease

A street railroad company is amenable to the state for exceeding its lawful authority in entering into a lease; stockholders of the company may sue to restrain the making of an unauthorized lease.

Whether a street railroad company has exceeded its lawful authority by entering into a lease of its property or franchises is a question of excessive exercise of corporate power, for which it is amenable to the state;⁶⁸ and stockholders of the company have a right to invoke the aid of a court of equity to restrain the making of an unauthorized lease.⁶⁹ A private suitor, however, has no right to question the validity of a lease unless he has sustained a private injury,⁷⁰ nor has another corporation any standing so to do unless its rights or franchises have been invaded.⁷¹

Validity of assignment of lease. In the absence of any provision in a lease prohibiting its assignment by the lessee company, the lessor is not entitled to question the validity of such an assignment.⁷²

§ 148. — Duration and Termination

A lease of a street railroad for as long a period as the lessee shall continue to exist and be capable of exercising its functions refers to legal capacity and not financial ability.

A lease of a street railroad for as long a period as the lessee shall continue to exist and be capable of exercising its functions refers to legal capacity, and not financial ability to perform the lease;⁷³ and the appointment of a receiver for the lessee does not terminate such a lease.⁷⁴

§ 149. — Rights and Liabilities of Parties

Street railroad companies accepting the provisions of statutes permitting them to lease their lines are bound to assume the duties and obligations imposed by the statutes. Generally the lessee in operating the leased road is governed by the charter of the lessor, assumes all duties and liabilities imposed by the lessor's charter and franchise, and succeeds to all the rights and privileges of the lessor under its charter or contracts.

Street railroad companies accepting the provisions of statutes permitting them to enter into contracts for leasing lines to other companies, as authorized thereby, are bound to assume the duties and obligations imposed by the statutes as a consideration for the privilege.⁷⁵ It is a general rule that, when one company leases its road to another, the lessee, in operating it, is governed by the charter of the lessor, and assumes all duties and liabilities thereby imposed,⁷⁶ as well as the duties and liabilities of the lessor under its franchises to use the public streets,⁷⁷ although the lease is silent with respect thereto,⁷⁸ and although there is no statutory provision for such liability.⁷⁹ Conversely, the lessee succeeds to all the rights and privileges of the lessor under its charter⁸⁰ and under any contract between the lessor and the municipality made in pursuance of the charter,⁸¹ including rights to occupy streets and to lay tracks,⁸² even though at the time of the lease the lessor's corporate existence has ceased by the limitations of its charter.⁸³ This can be true, however, only where the lessee company, in operating the road in accordance with the charter of the lessor, is not violating its own charter.⁸⁴ The lessee cannot have or acquire by virtue of the lease any greater rights than the lessor had.⁸⁵ Both parties are bound by the terms of their agreement.⁸⁶

Negotiations merged in agreement

Negotiations prior to execution of agreement for lease of street railway company's railway system to traction company must be considered merged in such agreement in so far as they are contrary to terms of agreement.—Monongahela St. Ry. Co. v. Philadelphia Co., 39 A.2d 909, 350 Pa. 603.

Rent obligations

(1) Mere instruction by president of lessor street railroad, who was also president of lessee, to accounting officer of both companies, to treat agreed annual rental per share as dividends on stock of lessor corporation all of which was owned by the lessee, did not operate as verbal agreement to cancel rent obligation, with respect to lessee's liability as garnishee.—Lyon v. Pittsburgh Allegheny & Manchester Traction Co., 169 A. 229, 312 Pa. 584.

(2) A contract, pursuant to which street railway company acquired possession of, and right to, operate

Sublessees and assignees of leases. Where the lessee of a street railroad demises the property to another for a term which expires before the expiration of the original lease, the instrument is properly construed as a sublease rather than an assignment of the lease;⁸⁷ but a demise of leased lines and property for a term longer than that of the original lease operates as an assignment of such lease.⁸⁸ An assignee is liable on covenants of the original lease with respect to the property thereby demised,⁸⁹ while a sublessee is not liable on covenants contained in the original lease, in the absence of any express assumption thereof.⁹⁰ It has been stated that, where a street railroad company has under its lease power to charge an extra fare for particular service, a sublessee or assignee of such lease has the same right.⁹¹ In an action of forcible entry and detainer by the assignee of a lease, the invalidity of the lease on the ground of noncompliance with a statute relating to approval of the assignment is no defense, since title is not involved in the proceeding, but only the right of possession, and a tenant is estopped to deny his landlord's title.⁹²

On expiration or other termination of the lease the rights of the parties depend primarily on the terms of their agreement,⁹³ especially as to such matters as the surrender or delivery up to the lessor of property and equipment in the hands of the lessee.⁹⁴ Where, however, a lease is terminated not under, and in accordance with, its terms but on the mere arbitrary demand of the lessor company, and the entire property is surrendered, the lessor is not entitled to rely on provisions of the lease with respect to the rights and liabilities of the parties on its termination.⁹⁵ A company holding over after expiration of the lease pursuant to a "gentleman's agreement" is not a trespasser⁹⁶ and is liable only for a fair rental for the use of the property thus held.⁹⁷ street railway properties of traction company, was held not to make railway company liable for principal amount of bonded loan previously made to traction company.—Second Ave. Traction Co., for Use of Putnam, v. United Traction Co. of Pittsburgh, 195 A. 25, 328 Pa. 257.

Taxes and assessments

(1) In general.—Pennsylvania Steel Co. v. New York City R. Co., C.C.N.Y., 191 F. 216—60 C.J. p 312 note 15 [c].

(2) A traction company's covenant in lease to it of street railway company's railway system to pay all taxes imposed on lessor because of its business earnings or profits included obligation to pay lessor's federal and state income taxes, even though non-existent when covenant was made.—Monongahela St. Ry. Co. v. Philadelphia Co., 39 A.2d 909, 350 Pa. 603.

(3) On the other hand, under lease requiring lessee to pay or furnish to lessor the money necessary to pay all taxes of every description, federal, state, and municipal, levied on demised property, income therefrom, business thereof, rights and franchises thereto pertaining, and on certain portions of capital stock of lessor, and also any taxes by law required to be deducted from any amounts payable as dividends or otherwise to owners of such stock, lessee was required to pay federal taxes, whether assessed on lessor or on lessee; but lessee was not liable for federal income tax on rent received by lessor.—Eastern Massachusetts St. Ry. Co. v.

Enforcement of guaranty

A street railway company, by bringing suit for specific performance of corporate defendant's guaranty of performance of covenant by corporate lessee of plaintiff's railway system to pay all taxes on plaintiff's property, earnings, or profits, revoked provision in lease agreement for arbitration of differences between parties as to construction of agreement and due performance of covenants therein, and did not disentitle itself to sue in equity for enforcement of guaranty.—Monongahela St. Ry. Co. v. Philadelphia Co., 39 A.2d 909, 350 Pa. 603.

§ 150. Contracts Not to Construct or Operate Road

An agreement by a street railroad company not to exercise a right to construct or operate its road is void except where the public will not be harmed, or will be benefited, thereby.

A street railroad company is without power to disable itself to perform its public duties by agreeing not to exercise a right under its charter or franchise to construct or operate its road into or through particular streets or territory, and such an agreement is void,⁹⁸ except where the public will not be harmed, or will be benefited, thereby.⁹⁹ An agreement between two street railroad companies to establish a joint station and terminus impliedly prohibits the extension by either company of its road beyond such station;¹ and an agreement not to cross each other's tracks has been held to be, in effect, an agreement that neither company will enter or invade the territory occupied by the other.²

§ 151. Contracts for Unified Management and Operation

A street railroad company may join with another company in setting up a board to manage and operate the properties and systems of both for the purpose of unification.

A street railroad company has power, subject to the consent of the municipality in which it operates,³ to join with another company or other companies in setting up a board to manage and operate the properties and systems of both or all such companies, for the purpose of unification.⁴

Such an arrangement or agreement does not constitute an assignment or transfer of the powers, duties, or franchises of the companies participating therein,⁵ and does not work a nonuser of their franchises, so as to render them liable to forfeiture,⁶ but is in effect merely the employment of managers, agents, and servants to attend to details of operation.⁷ Contracts made by an interurban electric railroad company with another corporation, which was virtually the sole stockholder of the railroad, for payment of management, engineering, and contracting fees, are not void, but are subject to careful scrutiny to see that they do not divert the assets of the railroad without consideration.⁸

§ 152. Contracts for Joint or Interchangeable Use of Tracks

Except where otherwise provided by statute or charter, a street railroad company has power to contract with another company for the joint or interchangeable use of its tracks and lines, and such power carries with it the right to fix by agreement the remuneration to be paid for such use.

Inasmuch as a street railway company, except where otherwise provided by statute or its charter,⁹ has power to contract with another company for the joint or interchangeable use of its tracks and lines,¹⁰ particularly where such power has been declared or confirmed by statute,¹¹ a company may, by virtue of an agreement with another company, acquire the right to enter upon and use the tracks of the latter.¹² The power to make such a contract carries with it the right to fix by agreement the remuneration to be paid by one company to the other for such use,¹³ and the compensation should be determined by a consideration of the contract.¹⁴

Nature of contract. A contract between two street railroad companies conferring on one the right to operate its cars over the tracks of the other, jointly with the latter company, which retains control over its road for all other purposes, is of the nature of a license,¹⁵ and is not a lease;¹⁶ nor is it an assignment to one company of the franchise or of franchise rights of the other.¹⁷ It has been held that such a contract confers on the company which is thereby given the right to operate over the tracks of the other no right or interest which can be assigned or leased;¹⁸ but the rights of the company over whose tracks the other company is given a right of operation pass to, and may be exercised by, its successor or an assignee of its property.¹⁹

Construction and operation. The general rules relating to the construction and operation of contracts are applicable to contracts between two street railroad companies for the joint use of tracks or lines.²⁰

Duration and termination. It is competent for the parties to an agreement for the joint use of street railroad tracks to agree on any period for the duration of their contract,²¹ and they may, if they choose to do so, provide that it shall cease on the passage of a statute, even though it is unconstitutional.²² Where the rights of a company to maintain and operate a street railroad expire, the right of another company to operate over its tracks, under an agreement for such operation, necessarily expires also.²³

Rights, liabilities, and remedies of parties. Street railroad companies, by making contracts for the joint use of tracks or lines, acquire no new or greater powers and privileges than those created by their respective charters,²⁴ and each of such companies, while using the road of another company, must in all things conform to the provisions of the charter of the latter.²⁵ Either party to the contract is entitled to an injunction to restrain a violation thereof,²⁶ but, in the absence of any provision to the contrary in the contract, the mere failure of a company to pay the agreed compensation for the use of the tracks of another company does not in itself entitle the latter to interfere with or prevent such use.²⁷ While exercising and enjoying the rights conveyed by the contract, neither party can plead that the contract is ultra vires or illegal.²⁸

§ 153. Consolidation of Roads

In the absence of statutory permission, street railroad companies are without power to consolidate or merge, and an attempted consolidation or merger is void.

the character and extent of the consolidation which may be effected.³¹ Unless otherwise expressly provided by the statute authorizing consolidation, it is not necessary that a company entering into a consolidation shall have actually constructed or be operating a street railroad;³² and even where such a requirement exists it has been held that the failure of one of the consolidating companies to have a road constructed or in operation does not prevent the consolidated company from being a de facto corporation.³³ A prohibition against the consolidation of parallel or competing railroads has been held not to apply to street railroad companies;³⁴ and under a constitutional provision making void all contracts or agreements defeating or lessening competition, a consolidation of street railroad companies is not void because there is a small amount of competition at particular points, where the systems as a whole do not compete.³⁵

How effected. The sale by a street railroad company of its property and franchises to another company, and the exercise of such franchises by the latter do not, of themselves and without some further provision, operate to effect a consolidation of the two companies;³⁶ but, where the coming together of two companies under authority of law is in fact a consolidation, it is of no consequence by what name the act is characterized³⁷ or by what steps the result has been effected.³⁸ Proceedings for the consolidation of street railroad companies are governed by statutes relating specifically to such companies rather than to those relating to corporations generally.³⁹

Operation and effect. As a general rule, a street railroad company formed by the consolidation of two or more such companies assumes, by operation of law, all the burdens, liabilities, and obligations of the constituent companies,⁴⁰ although the latter may also remain liable therefor,⁴¹ and succeeds to all their rights, franchises, and privileges,⁴² subject to all conditions originally attached thereto and restrictions imposed thereon,⁴³ regardless of whether such consolidated company is a corporation de jure or only de facto.⁴⁴ The consolidated company cannot, however, be made liable on obligations of a constituent company, in substitution for and to the exclusion of the latter, without the consent of the creditors;⁴⁵ but, where the consolidated company assumes the liabilities of its constituent companies, a creditor may at his election have recourse to the new company, and recover against it.⁴⁶ Existing liens are not affected by consolidation,⁴⁷ except that, it has been held, where tax liens existed before consolidation against the properties of each of the consolidating companies, such liens attach to the whole property after consolidation and may be enforced against it without dismembering or separating it into the several portions as they existed before consolidation.⁴⁸ It has been pointed out that a consolidation, in its legal consequences, differs radically from a sale.⁴⁹

Rights and remedies of stockholders. Minority stockholders of a company may set aside a consolidation agreement because of fraud,⁵⁰ and may invoke the aid of a court of equity to enforce equality of exchange for their shares in the consolidating company,⁵¹ but they are without right to restrain a proposed consolidation where it is not inequitable on its face.⁵² Objecting stockholders who purchase their stock after enactment of a statute authorizing consolidation thereby consent to the provisions of the statute, and the exercise of the right of consolidation does not ipso facto impair the obligation of the contract of the corporation with the stockholders.⁵³ Assignees of stock are barred from objecting to a consolidation by a prior consent thereto on the part of their assignors.⁵⁴

Questioning validity of consolidation. The legality and validity of a consolidation of two or more street railroad companies cannot be collaterally attacked, but may be questioned only in an action brought for that purpose.⁵⁵ A consolidated company cannot defend against a claim due from one of the constituent companies on the ground that the consolidation was not authorized by law.⁵⁶

IX. BONDS, LIENS, MORTGAGES, AND RECEIVERS

§ 154. Bonds

The power of a street railroad company to make and issue bonds, and their form, requisites, and validity, are governed by the rules applicable to other railroad companies and to corporations generally.

The power of a street railroad company to make and issue bonds, and their form, requisites, and validity, are governed by the rules applicable to other railroad companies and to corporations generally,⁵⁷ and, subject thereto, by the terms of the mortgage securing them.⁵⁸ Before a legal issue of street railroad bonds may be made, all charter, statutory, and constitutional requirements with respect thereto must be complied with, and a want of such compliance ordinarily renders the bonds void,⁵⁹ although the company may be estopped by its conduct to deny their validity,⁶⁰ and, where the company has acted within the scope of its general powers, bonds are not void for all purposes merely because the authorized amount is exceeded.⁶¹ In the hands of a bona fide purchaser for value without notice, negotiable bonds, although unlawfully issued, have been held to be a valid claim against the property of the company for the amount actually received by it therefor.⁶² In the absence of any evidence to the contrary, it will be presumed that authority to issue bonds has been properly exercised,⁶³ and in an action on a bond its illegality cannot be shown unless it has been pleaded in the answer.⁶⁴

A bond, although completely executed in due form, has no validity before delivery.⁶⁵ Where bonds are issued by one company to provide funds for another, and as the agent of the latter, it is liable to holders of such bonds as the principal debtor.⁶⁶ A bond is nonnegotiable where it provides

Rejection of part of issue held arbitrary

Rejection by the Public Utility Commission of certificate extending bond issue except as to a part thereof, in order to create satisfactory relationship between bond issue and security, was so arbitrary and unreasonable as to amount to error of law requiring reversal of order, where order would throw company into bankruptcy and disrupt service with considerable loss to bondholders, and especially where company had never defaulted on bonds.—York Rys. that a majority of the bondholders may waive defaults and extend the time for payment and inhibits suit on the bond and on the mortgage when due.⁶⁷ The rights and powers of a mortgage trustee to cancel and retire bonds depends on the scope of the mortgage agreement.⁶⁸

Rights of bondholders. The general rules as to the rights of a purchaser or holder of bonds apply to purchasers or holders of bonds of a street railroad company.⁶⁹ As between bona fide purchasers for value all bonds of the same issue are equal in priority, the lien of each dating from the recording of the mortgage by which it is secured and not from the time of its issuance.⁷⁰ A bondholder is entitled to recover property or funds pledged for the security of the bonds and improperly diverted therefrom,⁷¹ or to compel the mortgagor company to account for a depreciation in value of the mortgaged property caused by failure to conserve, or improper diversion of, the business and income;⁷² and, where junior mortgagees receive the benefit of an improper diversion of property, they may be compelled to account therefor to bondholders under a prior mortgage.⁷³

Action cannot be maintained by a holder of bonds of one company to impress a lien on the earnings of another company which has promised to pay them, but the holder remains merely a general creditor of the latter company.⁷⁴ A waiver of a default on the part of the company by a majority of the holders of its bonds does not preclude a non-assenting bondholder from enforcing his bond, in the absence of agreement to the contrary.⁷⁵ Ordinarily, no scheme of reorganization can be entered into by the trustee named in a mortgage securing bonds, which will prejudicially affect the rights of bondholders, without their assent,⁷⁶ but such assent may be shown as well by acquiescing in the consummation of the scheme as by a positive adoption of it.⁷⁷ A bond, by referring to the mortgage securing it for the consequences of default of payment, when due, makes the pertinent provisions of the mortgage a part of the bond,⁷⁸ and charges the purchaser thereof with notice of such consequences.⁷⁹

General rules as to the rights of holders of corporate bonds convertible into stock, discussed in Corporations § 1167, apply in respect of such con-

a payment, but a purchase and extension, leaving the property as the primary fund for their payment.—Farmers' Loan & Trust Co. v. Central Park, N. & E. R. R. The term "negotiable in form," as applied to a participation receipt issued by the agent of a corporation to holders of its bonds, would not imply that the receipts would be negotiable in the sense of the law merchant so as to pass to an innocent holder for value. vertible bonds of a street railroad company.⁸⁰ As such an agreement for conversion, although appearing on the face of the bonds, is in fact an independent agreement and no part of the bonds proper,⁸¹ the validity of the bonds is not impaired by conversion agreements written into them.⁸² Conversion agreements which authorize the holders to exchange the bonds for preferred stock which is to be equally and ratably secured with bonds are invalid where not authorized by statute when made,⁸³ and the bondholders who exchange their bonds for preferred stock cease to be creditors and become mere stockholders,⁸⁴ and are not entitled to share in the assets of the company until all creditors have been paid in full.⁸⁵

In the absence of a statute providing otherwise, the property of a street railroad company is ordinarily not subject to a mechanic's lien except such property as is not essential to the performance of its public duties.

The property of a street railroad company is ordinarily not subject to a mechanic's lien, in the absence of statute otherwise providing,⁸⁶ except such property as is not essential to the performance of the public duties of the company.⁸⁷ Whether a statute providing for such a lien on "railroads" or the property of railroad companies makes the property of street railroad companies subject thereto is a question on which the authorities are not in agreement, it having been held in some cases that such a statute applies to street railroads⁸⁸ and in others that it does not.⁸⁹ Such a lien, where it exists under the statute, may be claimed and enforced by such persons⁹⁰ and for such supplies⁹¹ only as are thereby specified.

The rights and liabilities under a lien may be controlled by the contract under which the particular lien is created,⁹² and a street railroad may create two classes of security holders, giving a first lien on property to one and on income to the other.⁹³ The parties to a franchise contract can be held to have contemplated only such liens as are created by the valid exercise of the contract.⁹⁴ Where the franchise contract does not so provide, the annual payments to the grantor of a stipulated percentage of the grantee's earnings cannot be construed as liens against the property of the grantee,⁹⁵ but, where by the terms of the franchise the parties undertake to provide for a lien in favor of the grantor against the property of the railroad company for all sums due for the making of street improvements or repairs, such claims constitute a lien against the property of the railroad.⁹⁶ A statute authorizing a company to build a work which is for the joint benefit of itself and another company, and to charge the latter with a portion of the cost thereof, gives the former company no lien on the property of the latter, in the absence of express provision therefor.⁹⁷

§ 156. Mortgages

- a. In general
- b. Rights and liabilities of parties

a. In General

A street railroad company is without power to mortgage its franchise, road, or property, and such a mortgage is void, except where authority so to do is conferred by statute or the charter of the company.

A street railroad company is without power to mortgage its franchise, road, or property, and such a mortgage is void,⁹⁸ except where authority so to do is conferred by statute or the charter of the company,⁹⁹ and then only for such purposes¹ and amount² as are thereby permitted. Where such power is granted by statute, it cannot be abridged by a municipality;³ but, where the consent of the municipality is required by law, it must first be obtained.⁴ The execution of a mortgage is not a violation of a constitutional provision prohibiting any alienation of a franchise which releases the holder thereof from its duties and liabilities thereunder,⁵ nor does it violate a provision of the franchise that no other company shall ever use the right thereby granted.⁶ A supplemental indenture providing for the issuance of additional bonds under an existing mortgage is not a new mortgage, and so not subject to statutes relating to mortgages of street railroads.⁷

A covenant by a street railroad company, in debentures or bonds issued by it, that, if it shall thereafter mortgage any of its property, such debentures shall participate in the security of the mortgage on equal terms with all other indebtedness secured thereby constitutes an enforceable agreement by the company not to mortgage its property save in the manner so provided.⁸

Property conveyed. The property conveyed by a mortgage executed by a street railroad company depends primarily on the terms of the instrument, as construed in accordance with the rules applicable to other railroad mortgages and mortgages generally.⁹ Fixtures and other property affixed to mortgaged realty of a street railroad company after the execution of the mortgage become subject to its lien as and when attached to the land.¹⁰ Where a mortgage of a street railroad company's property contains covenants of general warranty, a title acquired by the mortgagor company after the execution of the mortgage inures to the benefit of the mortgagee.¹¹

Subject to the general rules with respect to the right to mortgage property to be acquired in the future, as discussed in Mortgages § 73, property acquired by a street railroad company after the execution of a mortgage becomes subject thereto when an intention to include such property appears therein;¹² and it has been held that, even in the absence of express provision, extensions constructed after the execution of a mortgage become subject thereto where the road cannot be operated without them.¹³ A mortgage on after-acquired property extends to and embraces not only property acquired

General mortgage and first and second bonds

Interurban company whose stock was largely owned by railway company could, on liquidation, transfer its assets to railway company subject to first lien by trustee under general mortgage given by railway company which was secured by capital stock of interurban company, notwithstanding provisions in first and second bond indentures executed prior to railway company's acquisition of stock of interurban company that lien of first and second bonds should extend to railway company's after-acquired property, since after-acquired property mentioned in first and second bonds did not, under ejusdem generis rule, include such stock.—Fidelity & Columbia Trust Co. v. Louisville Ry. Co., supra.

by the mortgagor company within its capacity and powers existing at the time the mortgage is made, but also extensions made or additions acquired under authority granted after the execution of the mortgage;¹⁴ and it includes property acquired by the mortgagor company by merger into itself of another company or other companies, as well as property acquired merely by purchase.¹⁵

Where the property of a street railroad company which has executed a mortgage covering after-acquired property is sold, property thereafter acquired by the purchaser, where not within the doctrine of accession, is not subject to the mortgage,¹⁶ and so the mortgage does not embrace an extension afterward built by the purchaser under another and different charter;¹⁷ but, where the property is sold as a whole system, an extension, which the mortgagor company had authority under its charter to build, and which is afterward constructed by the purchaser as its successor in right, comes within the after-acquired property clause of the mortgage.¹⁸ Where a street railroad company which has executed a mortgage conveying after-acquired property subsequently consolidates with another or other companies, property acquired by the consolidated company for the particular use or benefit of the line formerly belonging to the mortgagor is subject to the lien of the mortgage,¹⁹ as is property substituted for that originally covered by the mortgage;²⁰ but property owned by, or acquired in the right of, one of the other consolidating companies is not brought within, or made subject to, the mortgage by the consolidation,²¹ and property, not within the doctrine of accession, thereafter acquired by the consolidated company for its own use or benefit, or for the use or benefit of the consolidated system as a whole, is not within the mortgage,²² except where its acquisition was actually within the contemplation of the parties to the mortgage at the time of its execution and an intention to include it appears.²³

The rights and liabilities of the parties to a mortgage of street railroad property are governed by the rules applicable to other mortgages.

The rights and liabilities of the parties to a mortgage of street railroad property are governed by the rules applicable to other mortgages and particularly to mortgages of railroad property.²⁴ Two or more mortgages executed by a street railroad company must, in determining the rights of the parties, be considered together in the light of the surrounding circumstances.²⁵ The rights of a mortgage trustee are limited by the terms of the mortgage indenture.²⁶ The rights of a mortgagee

Property held as received

Mortgagees held the property as they received it from the mortgagor.—Cambria Iron Co. v. Union Trust Co., supra.

Right to income

(1) As against certificate holders, mortgagee was held entitled to street railway's income earned after maturity of mortgage and appointment of receiver.—Harris Trust & Savings Bank v. Chicago Rys. Co., C.C.A.Ill., 56 F.2d 942, certiorari denied Babcock v. Chicago Rys. Co., 53 S.Ct. 16, 287 U.S. 614, 77 L.Ed. 533.

(2) Under a provision of a mortgage giving the mortgagor company, until default, the right to the income from the mortgaged property, interest on indebtedness owing to the company belongs to it.—Barber Asphalt Paving Co. v. Forty-Second St., etc., R. Co., N.Y., 180 F. 648, 103 C.C.A. 614—60 C.J. p 326 note 53.

Keeping bonds alive

Declaratory judgment authorizing payment to trustee under first mortgage indenture of income from property delivered to general mortgage trustee as security for payment of general mortgage bonds, to be used in calling first mortgage bonds which would be turned over to general mortgage trustee without cancellation as sinking fund for general mortgage bonds, was held error, where first mortgage indenture did not provide that called bonds could be kept alive.—Fidelity & Columbia Trust Co. v. Louisville Ry. Co., supra.

under a mortgage on a franchise and other property have been held to be subject to surrender of prior franchises and acceptances thereof.²⁷

In general, a street railroad company which has mortgaged its property is nevertheless free to deal with such property according to its own views of its own interests, subject to the terms of the mortgage, and provided it does not materially impair the value of the security.²⁸ The mortgagee is entitled to relief against any impairment of the security;²⁹ but unless otherwise expressly provided by the mortgage the mortgagee obtains no right to require the mortgagor company or any subsequent owner of the mortgaged property to improve it³⁰ or to manage it in any particular way.³¹ It has been held that, where part of the lines of a street railroad company are sold by it to the municipality, after the expiration of the company's franchise to operate such lines and a refusal to renew it, a court of equity is justified in apportioning a mortgage indebtedness on the whole system between the lines so sold and those retained by the company.³²

Time for payment; postponement. A provision in the franchise of a street railroad company for the payment to it of a specified sum, if earned, and for the cumulation of deficits in such payments, does not by implication make interest on mortgage indebtedness of the company payable only if the income of the company under the franchise is sufficient to pay it, or authorize the deferment of interest payments if the amount thereof is not earned.³³ A covenant to pay on a specified date does not impliedly preclude the parties from agreeing on a postponement of the maturity of the mortgage indebtedness,³⁴ and such a postponement, had by agreement, is not a default on the part of the company.³⁵

Release of property from lien of mortgage. Under a provision in a street railroad company's mortgage that the trustee shall release realty from the lien thereof on the substitution of property of equal value therefor, the trustee may be compelled to release property when the terms of such provision are complied with; and the property to be substituted for realty released under such a provision need not be realty.³⁶

Personal liability for debt; exhaustion of security. The effect of a provision in a street railroad company's mortgage that the mortgagor shall be liable in personam for the mortgage debt, and that any deficiency after exhausting the security may be enforced against the company, is to require a resort first to the security, and to limit the personal liability of the company to any deficiency remaining after the security has been exhausted.³⁷ It has been held that, unless the trustee under a street railroad company's mortgage securing its bonds is expressly authorized by the provisions thereof to enforce the obligation of a successor company which has assumed the mortgage, the right of action for such enforcement is vested in the bondholders alone.³⁸

Matters relating to priorities of mortgages of, or liens on, street railroad companies are governed by the general rules applicable to other mortgages and liens.

Public maintenance

Liens arising out of the paramount requirement of public maintenance form a first lien entitled to priority

an attaching creditor is not entitled to priority over a prior unrecorded mortgage,⁴⁰ and, in the absence of a statute providing otherwise, the rights of laborers and materialmen are not entitled to priority over mortgages and other encumbrances on street railroad property.⁴¹ A statute authorizing the levy of an attachment on the property of a street railroad company for personal injuries as though such property had not been mortgaged gives such an attachment priority over a mortgage theretofore executed.⁴²

Taxes and assessments. A mortgage executed by a street railroad company on its property to secure the payment of bonds issued for the purpose of constructing and equipping the mortgagor's lines of railroad has been held to be a lien on the property of the street railroad company described therein as against all special assessments for paving the streets,⁴³ except such as are assessed for paving already done, or as were in contemplation at the time the mortgage was recorded.⁴⁴ One who at the request of a street railroad company pays taxes on its mortgaged property does not have a lien on the property superior to the mortgage, although the company agrees that he shall have.⁴⁵

§ 158. Foreclosure of Lien or Mortgage

The general rules relating to the foreclosure of other mortgages and particularly the foreclosure of railroad mortgages are applicable to mortgages of street railroads.

The general rules relating to the foreclosure of other mortgages and particularly to mortgages of railroad property are applicable to mortgages of street railroads, as to the right to foreclose,⁴⁶ jurisdiction of a suit to foreclose,⁴⁷ intervention,⁴⁸ pleading,⁴⁹ defenses,⁵⁰ and the form, contents, and effect of the decree.⁵¹ These same general rules

Demand for leave to intervene

Owner of first mortgage bonds and owners of certificates for bonds were not entitled to intervene for purpose of securing disapproval of sale in absence of demand in court below for leave to intervene for such purpose, particularly since court was not obliged to allow it as a matter of right, even if such demand had been made.—In re Schommer, C.C.A.Ill., 112 F.2d 311.

Discretion of court

Permissive intervention under civil procedure rules is within discretion of district judge and can be reviewed only for abuse.—American Brake Shoe & Foundry Co. v. Interborough Rapid Transit Co., C.C.A.N.Y., 112 F.2d 669.

Value of property

The fact that mortgage trustees and bondholders' committees had agreed to reorganization plan, tentatively approved by the court, furnished no support for the charge of conspiracy with junior bondholders, as a basis for the alleged right to intervene, in the absence of a definite showing as to the value of the property as compared with first mortgage indebtedness, in view of wide divergence of views as to whether junior creditors would be entitled to realize anything on their claims.—In re Schommer, C.C.A.Ill., 112 F.2d 311.

Liens held barred by limitations

In a foreclosure suit wherein a receiver was appointed, and in which other mortgagees intervened, seeking to foreclose, interventions of laborers and materialmen to establish prior liens, on which no suit had been commenced within one year after accrual, were barred by statutes.—Interurban Const. Co. v. Central State Bank of Kiefer, 184 P. 905, 76 Okl. 281.

§ 159. Receivers

The general rules relating to other receivers are applicable to street railroad receiverships.

The general rules relating to other railroad receivers and receivers generally are applicable to street railroad receiverships, as to the grounds for, and propriety of, appointing receivers,⁵⁸ in matters as to their selection and appointment,⁵⁹ their right to and possession of property,⁶⁰ and their powers and duties,⁶¹ including those with respect to the management and operation of the road.⁶² The same general rules also have been held applicable to their adoption or rejection of contracts and leases made before the receivership,⁶³ and also have been held

Rate of fare

A court cannot authorize its receivers for a street railroad company to charge a higher rate of fare than that fixed as a maximum by the company's franchise.—Gas & Electric Securities Co. v. Manhattan & Queens Traction Corporation, D.C.N.Y., 253 F. 453.

Right to question

On petition of receiver of street railroad for instructions on whether to retain lease of elevated railroad granted by company which was also in hands of receiver, the lessor could not question finding that continued operation of the elevated would be a burden on lessee, which was to be determined solely in the interests of the lessee, particularly where the lessor's receiver had acquiesced in the finding.—*Murray v. Leave of court

(1) Proposed state court action by city and transit commission against rapid transit corporation undergoing federal receivership, and receiver, for declaratory judgment that receiver's proposed disaffirmance of lease would result in breach of obligation to city, was not maintainable without leave of federal court having jurisdiction of receivership proceeding.—American Brake Shoe & Foundry Co. v. Interborough Rapid Transit Co., D.C.N.Y., 10 F.Supp. 512, affirmed, C.C.A., 76 F.2d 1002, certiorari denied City of New York v. Murray, 55 S.Ct. 923, 295 U.S. 760, 79 L.Ed. 1702.

(2) City and transit commission, applying for permission to sue in state court rapid transit corporation undergoing federal receivership, had burden to show that balance of convenience weighed heavily in favor of their position.—American Brake Shoe & Foundry Co. v. Interborough Rapid Transit Co., D.C.N.Y., 10 F.Supp. 512, affirmed, C.C.A., 76 F.2d 1002, certiorari denied City of New York v. Murray, 55 S.Ct. 923, 295 U.S. 760, 79 L.Ed. 1702.

(3) In receivership proceeding of rapid transit corporation, proceeding on receiver's application for disaffirmance of lease might be stayed until final determination of suit in state court by city and transit commission for declaratory judgment that receiver's proposed disaffirmance of lease would result in breach of obligation to city.—*American Brake Shoe & Foundry Co. v. (5) Application denied.—American Brake Shoe & Foundry Co. v. Interborough Rapid Transit Co., 10 F.Supp. 512, affirmed, C.C.A., 76 F.2d 1002, certiorari denied City of New York v. Murray, 55 S.Ct. 923, 295 U.S. 760, 79 L.Ed. 1702.

Time for adoption or rejection

(1) Use by receiver of interurban railway of bridge lease by railway for period during which reasonable time for adoption or rejection of lease had been suspended by agreement between receiver and lessor was not adoption of lease by receiver.—

North Kansas City Bridge & Railroad Co. v. Leness, C.C.A.Mo., 82 F.2d 9.

(2) Operation of interurban railway by receiver for twenty-eight months before discontinuing operations and for eleven months after notification to lessor of bridge used by railway that lease would be affirmed or disaffirmed within reasonable time was not so unreasonable as to constitute adoption of lease by receiver.—*North Kansas City Bridge & Railroad Co. v. Claim established by state court

Under decree of federal court ordering sale of street railway in receiver's hands, requiring purchaser to pay claims against receiver, and authorizing claimant on nonpayment to enforce claim in federal court, purchaser was not obligated to pay claim established by judgment of state court.—Shepherd v. St. Louis Public Service Co., C.C.A.Mo., 64 F.2d 612.

Creditors could not recover fees paid prior to insolvency in absence of showing that such fees were paid with intent to hinder, delay, or defraud railway company's creditors.—United Light & Power Co. v. Grand Rapids Trust Co., C.C.A.Mich., 85 F.2d 331, certiorari denied in part United Light & Power Co. v. Grand Rapids Trust Co., 57 S.Ct. 118, 299 U.S. 591, 81 L.Ed. 436, certiorari dismissed Grand Rapids Trust Co. v. United Light & Power Co., 57 S.Ct. 312, 299 U.S. 618, 81 L.Ed. 456.

Current assessments

(1) Where street railway receivership was extended to foreclosure bill filed by third mortgage trustee and subsequently to foreclosure bill filed by first mortgage trustee, assessments for street pavement, sidewalk pavement and sewers, together with interest thereon, should be charged to receivership in effect when they were paid, since assessments were part of current upkeep expense.—In re New York State Rys., D.C.N.Y., 16 F.Supp. 717.

(2) Receiver was liable for paying claims while operating street railway system in receivership; but receiver was not liable to city for paving tracks after date when new corporation acquired title to most of receivership property pursuant to plan of reorganization where by such action receiver was prevented from thereafter operating cars on tracks with any reasonable prospect of benefit to receivership.—American Brake Shoe & Foundry Co. v. New York Rys. Co., C.C.A.N.Y., 85 F.2d 531, certiorari denied Sheeran v. City of New York, 57 S.Ct. 235, 299 U.S. 609, 81 L.Ed. 449.

(3) Receiver held not liable for paving assessment under terms of statute.—New York v. Lynch, 146 N.Y.S. 357, 161 App.Div. 292, affirmed 107 N.E. 1074, 213 N.Y. 638—60 C.J. p 333 note 84 [f].

Decree held proper Decree ordering sale of street railway then in receivership and requiring purchaser to pay claims against receiver, and retaining jurisdiction to retake property on purchaser's non-compliance with orders directing payment, was proper and governed those not parties to action.—Shepherd v. St. Louis Public Service Co., C.C.A.Mo., 64 F.2d 612.

Fees of counsel

Any preliminary arrangements concerning fees of counsel of a company must be assumed to have been incorporated in final unification plan adopted in railway receivership obligating city to pay any allowance made by court to counsel of company for services in receivership.—*Manhattan Ry. Payments made to parent company

(1) Receiver of interurban electric railway company could recover dividends paid to parent corporation while railway company was insolvent, notwithstanding some of such dividends were paid with money loaned by parent corporation, where loans were intended to be actual obligations of railway company.—United Light & Power Co. v. Grand Rapids Trust Co., C.C.A.Mich., 85 F.2d 331, certiorari denied in part *United Light & Power Co. v. Statute held inapplicable

The statute providing that action shall be continued in original party's name after transfer of interest therein, if transferee will indemnify such party against costs and damages, or that court may allow substitution of transferee as party, and that court shall require transferee to give such indemnity or cause his substitution on transferor's application, and order dismissal of suit on transferee's omission to do so, is inapplicable to action against street railway company's receiver after his discharge and sale of company's property under court decree requiring purchaser to pay injury and damage claims against receiver.—Truesdale v. concerned should be considered.⁷² The power to control and regulate the operation of street railroads resides primarily in the legislature of the state,⁷³ although within constitutional limitations it may be delegated to a municipality and a commission.⁷⁴ Although power of regulation may have been delegated, there is always in reserve the authority of the legislature to do directly what it authorizes its creatures to do.⁷⁵ Contracts between streetcar companies are not enforceable where they are in violation of valid public regulations.⁷⁶

Extent and limits of power to regulate generally. Regulations of the proper body must not be inconsistent or in conflict with the charter rights of the street railroad,⁷⁷ so that such body cannot, under the pretense of regulation, deprive the company of its property or franchise rights.⁷⁸ The regulations must not be imposed arbitrarily or capriciously, but must be such only as are reasonable,⁷⁹ or necessary and reasonably adapted to remedy the evils complained of,⁸⁰ and, hence, must not be such as will destroy or unreasonably impair the rights or franchises granted to the company.⁸¹ Thus, a municipal government cannot deprive a street railroad company of the right of way, which has been granted to it, except in the manner prescribed by law for the taking of private property for public use.⁸²

Regulations which are otherwise valid will be upheld if reasonable.⁸³ In determining the reasonableness of a regulation or order, pecuniary loss to the company which would result from compliance should be considered,⁸⁴ although such detail is not conclusive of the matter.⁸⁵ Hence, a regulation is not unreasonable or invalid from the mere fact that it will require a large outlay of money by the company.⁸⁶ The fact that an ordinance might increase employment cannot be considered in determining its validity.⁸⁷ The motive behind the promulgation of an order of regulation does not affect the reasonableness thereof.⁸⁸ A regulation which shows on its face that the end contemplated is the securing of reasonable safeguards against danger, and reasonable accommodations to the public, will ordinarily be presumed to be valid,⁸⁹ the burden of proving the unreasonableness of a regulation resting on the one who attacks its validity;⁹⁰ such regulations will not be interfered with on light grounds,⁹¹ or where they can fairly be said to tend toward a safer condition.⁹² The needs of the public, however, should be distinguished from mere inconvenience.⁹³

§ 161. — Municipality

As a general rule, municipal corporations are empowered to regulate the operation of street railways within their municipal boundaries.

While the power must be expressly granted or must arise by necessary implication from a power thus granted,⁹⁴ as a general rule, municipal corporations are empowered to regulate the operation of street railways within their municipal boundaries⁹⁵ whether the franchise is owned by an individual or by a corporation.⁹⁶ A municipal corporation cannot by contract abrogate or restrict this right.⁹⁷ The adoption of a home rule charter does not, of itself, give a city jurisdiction over a street railway except in matters of municipal concern.⁹⁸ A grant to a street railroad company to own property and transact business within a municipal corporation affords it no immunity from reasonable control and regulation by the municipal corporation under its police power,⁹⁹ although the railroad is constructed prior to the incorporation, as a municipal corporation, of the territory through which it runs,¹ particularly where it accepts the subsequently enacted municipal charter.²

On the other hand, where a street railroad company accepts its charter or the grant of its franchise from a municipality, it is bound to hold its special privileges subject to the regulations then existing and to such regulations as the municipality may from time to time impose on it, as reasonably necessary to the protection and preservation of persons and property,³ whether or not it accepts the ordinance making the regulation,⁴ and this is particularly true where the grant to the street railroad expressly reserves such right to the municipality.⁵ A track laid in a public street, although by express public grant, is subject to such regulations as are reasonably necessary to secure the public safety.⁶ Under a general power reserved to the municipality in the ordinance granting the franchise, specific regulations may be promulgated.⁷ A regulation in an ordinance granting a street railroad company the right to operate along the streets of the city, and providing that it shall apply to streets "hereafter" used, applies to the exercise of the franchise on streets subsequently added within the limits of the city.⁸

The right to regulate the operation of street railways is subject to limitation.⁹ The power must be exercised within its scope.¹⁰ It must be exercised reasonably,¹¹ without unreasonably invading private rights.¹² Whether or not the enactment is reasonable is subject to judicial inquiry.¹³ If a reasonable doubt as to the reasonableness of the regulation exists it will be resolved in favor of the municipal power.¹⁴ It has been held that, in the absence of express authority of enactment, a penal ordinance regulating the safety devices to be adopted by a street railroad which undertakes to enforce a higher standard than that imposed by the common law should not be sustained;¹⁵ that the judgment of the board of directors of a street railroad is supreme and exclusive in the absence of statutory provision, in the operation of its roads and the running of its cars;¹⁶ and that a municipal corporation cannot interfere with such judgment.¹⁷ If a grant of special powers and privileges accompanies the grant of a street railway franchise, coupled with limitation on the right of the municipal interference, the municipal corporation cannot, by any regulation of its own, abridge the privilege concerned or infringe on the limitations thus prescribed.¹⁸

The power conferred on a municipality to regulate the exercise of the franchise of a street railroad company is in the nature of a police power which may be modified or repealed by the legislature,¹⁹ and may be revoked and conferred on another agency,²⁰ and such revocation takes place where the same power is conferred on a state board or commission.²¹ Where the power to regulate the railways has been conferred on a state board, any conflicting power theretofore existing in a municipality ceases,²² and the municipality has no power to encroach on the power of the board.²³ However, the creation of a board on which has been conferred the power of general supervision of all railroads in the state that it may ascertain the physical conditions and details of operation for the purpose of recommending improvements has been held not to take away from the municipality the power to regulate the conduct of street railroads operating therein.²⁴ Where a municipality is given the right to operate and regulate a street railroad, it has been held that it can regulate it without the approval of a state commission, where the statute giving the commission jurisdiction over railroads is not clear whether it intends municipalities to be included, and the commission has not attempted, in the past, to exercise jurisdiction over the system.²⁵

§ 162. — Public Board, Commission, or Officers in General

Items improperly charged

The legislature could delegate to a state department the duty of securing an adjudication on question whether certain items had been improperly charged to cost of service. —Attorney General v. Trustees of Boston Elevated Ry. Co., 67 N.E.2d 676, 319 Mass. 642.

Acquiring stock

A street railroad can acquire stock of another carrier existing under state laws only if authorized to do so by the public service commission. —Warren v. Fitzgerald, 56 A.2d 827, 139 Md. 476.

mission must be derived from the legislature by express grant²⁷ or reasonable intentment therefrom.²⁸ Such boards or commissions may act only within the authority granted by the statute,²⁹ or, as otherwise stated, the board or commission can exercise only such powers as the law has conferred on it,³⁰ and no regulations or orders may be promulgated by it beyond the powers delegated in the statute,³¹ and the enforcement of an order or regulation not within its powers to make will be restrained.³²

The power to regulate a street railroad company and its operation conferred on a state board does not include the power to grant franchises;³³ and, where the franchise granted to a street railroad company is subject to conditions and reservations set forth therein, the board may not by regulation interfere with or abrogate conditions or reservations lawfully imposed by a municipality in granting the franchise.³⁴ On the other hand, where the power to regulate a street railroad is vested by the constitution in a board or commission, it cannot be deprived of its power by the terms of the franchise granted by the local authorities.³⁵ When the power of the state has been once delegated to a board or commission, this right to its exercise is exclusive of its exercise by any other body,³⁶ except such others as are specifically authorized to exercise it.³⁷

Where the power to regulate has been delegated to both a commission and the municipality, the power of the municipality is subject to that of the commissioners when exercised,³⁸ and the regulation of the board on the same subject prevails over the regulation of the municipality.³⁹ A board or commission to which regulatory powers have been delegated by the state has complete administrative supervision over the operation of the cars of a street railroad company.⁴⁰ In at least one jurisdiction giving to a state board power to regulate street railroads, an exception is made with respect to railroads owned or operated by a municipality.⁴¹

Management contract

(1) Under statute providing that no charge for services performed for a utility by an affiliated interest under a management contract shall exceed reasonable cost of performing such service, a charge for services rendered to street railroad by its affiliated interests was not only required to be reasonable but was required to represent the cost to the affiliated interest of performing the services.—International Ry. Co. v. Public Service Commission, 36 N.Y.S. 2d 125, 264 App.Div. 506, affirmed 47 N.E.2d 435, 289 N.Y. 830.

(2) Evidence sustained decision of the commission that street railroad failed to sustain burden of proving reasonableness of the cost of obtaining services of an affiliated interest, pursuant to a management contract, and showing that charges made were the actual cost to the affiliated interest, so that, under statute, the commission was justified in disapproving the contract.—*International Ry. Conveyance to authority

Where, after commission's order granting railroad temporary authority to use part of tracks of transit company, bankruptcy trustee conveyed property of transit company free of all claims except easements, etc., to transit authority, such order be-

Estoppel to deny power. Consent to, and compliance with, an order of the board estops the railway to deny the power of the board to make such order.⁴²

Proceedings before board. The proceedings before the board are governed by the statutes and rules relating thereto.⁴³ Where changes in circumstances have occurred after the close of a hearing before the board which materially affect the question before the board, a rehearing thereon should be granted.⁴⁴

Review of orders of board. In some jurisdictions there is provision for a review of the orders or rulings of the board or commission by a court,⁴⁵ in which case the review is limited to a consideration of such questions only as are permitted by the statute.⁴⁶

§ 163. Particular Regulations

The regulating body may, within its powers, make any regulation prescribing the manner in which a street railroad company shall enjoy its franchise rights, which is reasonable and proper for the safety and protection of persons and property.

As a general rule, the regulating body may, within its powers, make any regulation prescribing the manner in which a street railroad company shall enjoy its franchise rights, which is reasonable and proper for the safety and protection of persons and property,⁴⁷ as, for example, the care to be taken in the operation of the railroad generally,⁴⁸ and the motive power to be used on streetcars within municipal limits,⁴⁹ as by prohibiting the use of steam as a motive power.⁵⁰ The regulating body may make a regulation against cars standing on the tracks,⁵¹ or grant the privilege of carrying passengers, and at the same time deny the privilege of operating freight cars,⁵² and an order may require that a street railroad be permitted to carry both passengers and freight.⁵³ An ordinance prohibiting commercial advertising on the exterior sides of streetcars has been held invalid.⁵⁴ It has been both affirmed⁵⁵ and denied⁵⁶ that a street railroad company is within a statutory provision making railroad companies liable for all damages caused by the running of trains. A street railroad company is not came functus officio.—Fallon v. Illinois Commerce Commission, supra.

Acquiring property in public utility

The statutory provision is not modified by provision in statute creating the transit authority as a municipal corporation that, in case the authority acquires plant equipment property and rights in property of any public utility used or useful in operation of transportation system, the commission shall transfer and deliver to the board all books, papers, and records in control of the commission affecting "such public utility" exclusively, since the quoted phrase refers to the utility purchased.—Fallon v. § 164. — As to Passenger Service and Accommodations

The public is entitled to streetcar service which will, within reasonable limits, meet its needs, subject to the general rule that regulations adopted to secure such service must be reasonable.

A street railroad, the franchise of which requires it to furnish efficient service, may be compelled to render such service if it fails to do so.⁵⁸ The public is entitled to streetcar service which will, within reasonable limits, meet its needs,⁵⁹ subject to the general rule, however, that regulations adopted to secure such service, whether in the form of statute, ordinance, or order of a board or commission, must be reasonable.⁶⁰ Accordingly, regulations may be made with respect to the services and accommodations which street railroad companies are required to provide for passengers who desire to ride on its cars.⁶¹

Regulations have been made, and held reasonable, requiring street railroad companies to keep tickets for sale on its cars.⁶² A street railway company may be required to furnish adequate facilities to the public,⁶³ even though it suffers some incidental loss in complying with such requirement.⁶⁴ Regulations have been promulgated and held reasonable which require the company to furnish additional seating capacity,⁶⁵ or trailers,⁶⁶ or cars,⁶⁷ or waiting room or waiting cars.⁶⁸ A regulation requiring the furnishing of seats for substantially all persons at all times is unreasonable,⁶⁹ although an order for an increase in the facilities provided during particular hours when many passengers are compelled to stand is reasonable.⁷⁰ An ordinance providing that it is the duty of the railroad to operate cars in sufficient numbers reasonably to accommodate the public is not unreasonable.⁷¹ A commission may prohibit or permit and regulate the receipt and amplification of radio programs on streetcars under such conditions that the total utility service shall not be unsafe, uncomfortable, or inconvenient.⁷²

Desirability of radio programs on public vehicles was a matter for decision between transit company operating streetcars, the public, and the commission.—Public Utilities Commission of District of Columbia v. Pollak, supra.

Occasional radio broadcasts of music alone in public streetcars would be constitutionally permissible.—Public Utilities Commission of District of Columbia v. Pollak, supra.

Findings and determination of commission

(1) In proceeding to determine whether installation and use of radio receivers in streetcars were consistent with public convenience, comfort, and safety, weight to be attached to public opinion surveys was a proper matter for determination by the commission.—Public Utilities Commission of District of Columbia v. Pollak, supra.

Regulations have been promulgated and held reasonable which prescribe the number of passengers to be carried in a car;⁷³ and it has been held a reasonable regulation to require that the company shall designate on its cars the destination thereof.⁷⁴ Regulations have also been promulgated and held reasonable which require the railway to carry a passenger thereon to any regular stopping place desired by him, on the car's route, without a change of cars,⁷⁵ except for transfer to a connecting line going in another direction,⁷⁶ or in case of an accident.⁷⁷

Other regulations which have been promulgated and held reasonable require cars to be stopped at frequent intervals,⁷⁸ or at all street crossings,⁷⁹ or at any point on the line,⁸⁰ or at any regular stopping place,⁸¹ when signaled to do so. Likewise, it has been held reasonable to require conductors not to allow ladies or children to leave or enter cars while in motion.⁸²

It has been held that the regulating body may provide for the separation of races on the streetcars operated within the city.⁸³ Regulations may be promulgated in the interest of public health,⁸⁴ subject to the general requirement of reasonableness,⁸⁵ as for example a regulation providing for the fumigation of streetcars,⁸⁶ a regulation fixing the minimum temperature to be maintained in such cars,⁸⁷ or prohibiting smoking in streetcars.⁸⁸ A street railroad has been held not to be within a provision requiring drinking water to be kept on a railroad train.⁸⁹

Frequency of service. Regulations have been enacted or promulgated which prescribe the frequency with which cars shall run during hours of the day⁹⁰ or night,⁹¹ as by requiring that the cars be kept running regularly,⁹² or by requiring that a sufficient number of cars shall be run to accommodate the traveling public,⁹³ or to provide every passenger

(2) In such a proceeding testimony did not compel a finding that programs interfered substantially with conversation of passengers or with rights of communication constitutionally protected in public places.—Public Utilities Commission of District of Columbia v. Pollak, supra.

(3) Where commission found that radio reception was not an obstacle to safety of operation, that public comfort and convenience were not impaired, and that in fact the creation of better will among passengers tended to improve conditions under which the public rode, concluding that such installation and use were not inconsistent with public convenience, comfort, and safety, board was within its discretion in dismissing investigation.—Public Utilities Commission of District of Columbia v. Pollak, supra.

from whom fare is demanded with a seat,⁹⁴ or so that persons desiring transportation shall not be kept waiting longer than a prescribed time.⁹⁵ Such a regulation must be reasonable,⁹⁶ the reasonableness of the regulation to be determined by considering whether it has been carried to the point where it has become confiscatory.⁹⁷ The question of reasonableness is one of fact,⁹⁸ the burden of proving unreasonableness being on the party asserting it.⁹⁹ In ascertaining the reasonableness of such an ordinance, the language of the charter requiring the cars to run as often as the convenience of passengers required may be considered,¹ but it is not controlling or decisive,² nor is its reasonableness controlled by considerations of the expense to the company.³

Duty of railroad. It is the common-law duty of a street railroad to provide reasonable accommodations⁴ for such a number of passengers as, in the exercise of ordinary care, it has reason to anticipate will demand to be carried.⁵

§ 165. — As to Carriage of Goods

A regulating body may make a regulation denying a street railroad the privilege of operating freight cars on its line.

A regulating body may make a regulation denying a street railroad the privilege of operating freight cars on its line.⁶

§ 166. — As to Employees

A regulatory body may have the power to authorize the operation of one-man streetcars.

It has been both affirmed⁷ and denied⁸ that the general power to regulate street railroads includes the power to designate the number of employees required for the operation of a streetcar. Regulatory bodies have been held to have the power to authorize the operation of one-man cars,⁹ and, where so authorized, the conditions surrounding the operation of such cars are subject to regulation.¹⁰ In any event, the right under the police power to require two-men, or prohibit one-man, streetcars, exists only when necessary to the safety and convenience of the public,¹¹ and whether such a requirement is reasonably adapted to protect the public safety depends on the facts of each case.¹² Regulations have been held reasonable which requires a street railroad company to have a conductor in charge of each car,¹³ or to have a driver or motorman and a conductor or other agent on each car to control the car

Conflicting power of commission and municipality

(1) The regulation and operation of streetcars in city were a matter of general public concern and not a municipal affair within constitutional grant to chartered municipal corporations of complete autonomy with respect to municipal affairs, and, hence, initiative ordinance requiring two-man operation of streetcars, even if considered as a police regulation, was ineffective as against conflicting order, permitting one-man operation, of railroad commission which had paramount power in the matter and whose order acquired force of law, and the decision of the commission was conclusive on court with respect to question of comparative safety of one-man or two-man operation.—Los Angeles Ry. Corp. v. City of Los Angeles, supra.

(2) Whether one-man cars shall be operated on traction lines, constituting unified service in several cities and counties, is not a municipal affair beyond railroad commission's control, even though such cars are operated over line wholly within one city only.—Key System Transit Co. v. City of Oakland, 13 P.2d 979, 124 Cal.App. 733.

and passengers.¹⁴ Regulations which require conductors to be licensed have been held to be reasonable.¹⁵

§ 167. — As to Equipment of Cars

Within its powers, the regulating body may enact regulations which require a street railroad company to furnish its cars with such equipment as will tend to make their operation safer.

Within its powers, the regulating body may enact regulations which require a street railroad company to furnish its cars with such equipment as will tend to make their operation safer.¹⁶ Accordingly regulations have been enacted and held to be reasonable or valid which require proper and suitable fenders to be placed on the front of traction cars,¹⁷ which require headlights of designated strength to be carried,¹⁸ which require screens or vestibules on cars during the winter months to afford protection to the motormen and conductors,¹⁹ or which require every streetcar to be provided with a stool as a seat for the motorman.²⁰ It has also been held to be a reasonable regulation to require a street railroad company to equip its cars with air or electric brakes,²¹ unless it clearly appears that there is no necessity for a more efficient brake than that already in use,²² or that neither an air nor electric brake is more efficient than the one in use.²³

Under the federal Safety Appliance Act, the section of the statute requiring automatic couplers applies to cars hauled by an electric locomotive on an interurban interstate railway,²⁴ but not to single self-propelled cars on such railways.²⁵ The provision of the act excepting from the requirement of automatic couplings cars "used upon street railways" is applicable only when the cars are in fact so used.²⁶

§ 168. — As to Movement and Speed of Cars

A regulating body may make reasonable regulations with respect to the movements and speed of streetcars.

It is within the power of the regulating body to make reasonable regulations with respect to the movements of streetcars,²⁷ as by requiring cars to stop at specified places,²⁸ such as before crossing intersecting streets,²⁹ or before reaching a railroad crossing,³⁰ and not to proceed until it has been ascertained that the way is clear;³¹ or prohibiting motormen from moving cars across the tracks of a steam railroad until the conductor crosses the tracks and signals the motorman to proceed;³² The regulating body may also make reasonable regulations prohibiting the starting of an elevated train until all persons on the platform, desiring to do so, have entered;³³ or requiring that a car shall not pass any other car standing at a crossing for the discharge or reception of passengers;³⁴ or that it shall slacken speed when approaching such a car;³⁵ or requiring a streetcar to stop on the approach of fire apparatus responding to a fire alarm call;³⁶ or requiring a streetcar entering a public square to turn to the right and pass around it.³⁷

Interurban railways

An ordinance regulating the stoppage at street intersections, of cars on railways using the streets, does not apply to an interurban railway operating along its own right of way and incidentally crossing streets.—Excelsior v. Minneapolis, etc., R. Co., 122 N.W. 486, 108 Minn. 407, 133 Am. S.R. 455, 24 L.R.A., N.S., 1035, 17 Ann. Cas. 550—51 C.J. p 1021 note 94.

In addition, the regulating body may make reasonable regulations limiting the rate of speed at which cars may be run within municipal limits³⁸ or in designated parts of the municipality.³⁹ It has been held, however, that a regulation as to speed enacted in former years, when the motive power and other conditions were different, does not apply to company operating in later years by a different motive power and under different conditions.⁴⁰ The law of the road as applied to vehicles on highways generally, and particularly as to motor vehicles, does not apply to street railways in so far as compliance therewith by a streetcar is impossible.⁴¹ An ordinance may give a streetcar the right of way at a crossing.⁴² A regulation as to the movement of streetcars which, although intended to relieve traffic conditions, has the effect of excluding the railroad from a street and thereby crippling its line is invalid,⁴³ even though the city has reserved in the franchise a right to regulate the operation of the railway upon such street.⁴⁴

§ 169. — As to Signals and Lookouts

Regulations which require streetcars to have signal lights and warning devices, and which require that the persons in charge shall keep a vigilant lookout have been held reasonable.

Regulations which have been held reasonable include those requiring streetcars to have signal lights on the front and rear,⁴⁵ or a good and sufficient headlight at certain hours;⁴⁶ and requiring suitable and seasonable warning to be given of the approach of streetcars to crossings,⁴⁷ as by requiring the cars to be provided with suitable gongs or bells which shall be sounded before reaching crossings of streets,⁴⁸ or steam railroads,⁴⁹ or when approaching other vehicles,⁵⁰ or when the streetcar is about to pass another car going in the opposite direction at a point where it is permissible for passengers to alight from or to board a car.⁵¹

Lookouts; vigilance. When within the powers of the regulatory body⁵² regulations have been held valid which require the persons in charge of a streetcar to exercise due care with respect to keeping a lookout,⁵³ or which require that the persons in charge of a streetcar shall keep a vigilant lookout for obstructions on the track,⁵⁴ or for teams and persons on foot, especially children either on the tracks or moving toward them,⁵⁵ and shall stop the car in the shortest time and space possible,⁵⁶ on the first appearance of any obstruction⁵⁷ or on the first appearance of danger to a team, person, or vehicle.⁵⁸ Such a regulation is not extraordinary or unreasonable,⁵⁹ even though the care required under it is greater than that imposed on the street railroad by the common law;⁶⁰ nor is it unreasonable in requiring to stop on the first sign of danger,⁶¹ or in requiring the stopping without specifying that due regard for the safety of passengers be taken.⁶² Similarly, regulations have been held reasonable which require persons in charge of a streetcar to exercise all possible care and vigilance on approaching a curve,⁶³ or another car which has stopped for the purpose of receiving or letting off passengers⁶⁴ or for any other purpose,⁶⁵ since those in charge of the approaching car are in absolute control thereof.⁶⁶

Interurban railroads. An interurban railroad is under a duty to give such signals as are required by the exercise of due care under the circumstances involved.⁶⁷ Ordinarily, signal statutes in terms applicable only to steam railroads do not apply to electric interurban railroads.⁶⁸ Where, however, there are other statutes making electric roads subject to the same duties as steam roads, the former are within signal provisions;⁶⁹ and, where an electric interurban railway is obligated to equip its cars with

Degree of care

In determining whether ordinance requiring motormen to stop car "in shortest time and space possible" on appearance of danger is invalid as exacting higher degree of care than common-law rule of ordinary care, ordinance should be considered with rule with respect to care to passengers, and the ordinance is not invalid as exacting a higher degree of care than common-law rule of ordinary care, and is sufficiently specific.—Dallas Ry. & Terminal Co. v. signalling devices ordinarily used only by steam engines, or the equivalent of such devices, it must obey the statutory requirements as to operation of such devices.⁷⁰ Under a statute imposing the duties of blowing the whistle or ringing the bell in certain designated situations on "the engineer or other person having the control of the running of a locomotive on any railroad," the statutory duty does not exist with respect to an electric railroad.⁷¹ Where the statute requires signals to be sounded by a railroad train at a specified distance from a crossing, it has been held that the statutory duty is inapplicable to a single electric car run on an interurban railroad.⁷² A general lookout statute is applicable to electric interurban railroads.⁷³

§ 170. — As to Roadbed and Tracks

The regulating body may enact reasonable regulations with respect to the condition of the roadbed and tracks of a street railroad company.

The regulating body may enact reasonable regulations with respect to the condition of the roadbed and tracks of a street railroad company,⁷⁴ as by requiring that it shall sprinkle or water its tracks, so as to lay the dust,⁷⁵ clean the streets between its rails,⁷⁶ or keep the tracks free from ice and snow;⁷⁷ or by granting the right to sprinkle sand on the tracks during a certain season;⁷⁸ or by prohibiting the placing of salt on the tracks except at certain places.⁷⁹ Reasonable regulations may also be enacted requiring street railroad companies to make changes in roadbeds, where required by the improved conditions of the street.⁸⁰

Fencing right of way. A statutory regulation requiring the right of way of a railroad to be fenced, even if otherwise applicable, does not apply to the tracks of a street railroad along a public highway,⁸¹ but an interurban railroad comes within the terms of a statute requiring railroads to fence their tracks passing through cultivated fields, even though such railroad also operates over a public road.⁸²

Lighting streets. Regulations have been promulgated requiring street railways to light the streets along which its cars operate.⁸³

§ 171. Rules and Regulations of Company

In the absence of a statute or ordinance to the contrary, a street railroad company has the right, and is under a duty, to adopt reasonable rules and regulations with respect to the conduct of its business and the running of its cars.

In the absence of a statute or ordinance to the contrary,⁸⁴ a street railroad company has the right,⁸⁵ and is under a duty,⁸⁶ to adopt reasonable rules and regulations with respect to the conduct of its business and the running of its cars, both for the safety and comfort of its passengers,⁸⁷ and for its own protection;⁸⁸ but in some jurisdictions the approval of a designated board is required before rules and regulations by the company may be put into effect.⁸⁹ Among regulations which have been adopted by the company and upheld are those limiting the number of passengers that may ride on a car at any one time,⁹⁰ those prohibiting passengers from riding on platforms of its cars,⁹¹ and those designating the stopping places for its cars,⁹² and prohibiting persons to board its cars until they have come to a stop at the designated stopping place.⁹³ The company may not promulgate and enforce rules which are arbitrary and illegal;⁹⁴ nor can it avoid the requirements of a statute under color of its right to make and enforce reasonable rules and regulations for the conduct of its business.⁹⁵

§ 172. Penalties for Violation of Regulations

A penalty may be imposed for a violation of a valid regulation by a streetcar company or its employees.

In order to enforce regulations promulgated or enacted by the regulating body, penalties have been frequently provided for violations thereof by the company or its employees,⁹⁶ recoverable in many instances by an action against the offending railway company.⁹⁷

§ 173. Acceptance of Regulations

A street railroad company need not accept a reasonable regulation in order to make it binding on the company.

A reasonable regulation of a regulatory body is binding on a street railroad company whether or not accepted by the company.⁹⁸

§ 174. License Fees and Taxes

The legislature or municipal government may impose a fee or tax on a street railroad company.

A fee or tax imposed by the legislature or by the municipal government may consist of a fixed fee for each car operated,⁹⁹ of a certain percentage of the annual earnings of the company,¹ or both;² or it may consist of a fixed sum to be paid annually,³ in some instances for each mile of railroad

York Utilities Co., 45 A.2d 634, 142 Me. 40.

Passengers exempt from sales tax

An amended statute, which after imposition of tax on services of common carriers and other utilities, provides that tax shall not apply to interstate movements of freight and express or to street railway fares, exempts passengers using different kind of vehicles employed in street railway system, such as trolley coaches and gasoline busses, from payment of tax.—Utah Light & Traction Co. v. constructed,⁴ or of a fixed sum for every passenger carried,⁵ or it may consist of a tax or fee based on both mileage and earnings.⁶ Under some provisions the license tax on the earnings of a street railroad company attaches to the earnings of the entire line, including that part which extends beyond the city limits,⁷ but under other provisions it is otherwise.⁸ An agreement that a street railroad company shall pay a certain per cent of its net income in such manner as the "legislature may thereafter direct" does not fix any obligation on the company to pay such amount, until the legislature by further legislation directs the manner of payment.⁹

§ 175. — Power and Right to Tax

The business of operating a street railroad is one which may properly be subjected to the payment of a license fee or tax, and the amount of such fee or tax should be reasonable.

The business of operating a street railroad is one which may properly be subjected to the payment of a license fee or tax,¹⁰ which is a fee or tax exacted in exchange for the privilege of operating cars upon streets subject to the control of the municipality;¹¹ and, in the absence of any contract provision between the municipality and the company,¹² a street railroad company is not exempted from the payment of such fee or tax by the mere fact that it has been granted an exclusive right over the streets,¹³ or by the fact that its property is taxed on an ad valorem basis;¹⁴ nor does the payment of a license fee or tax exempt the company from the payment of an ad valorem tax on its property;¹⁵ nor does the imposition of such a license tax and a tax on the property of the railway constitute double taxation in violation of constitutional prohibitions.¹⁶ On the other hand, a statute imposing a general corporate or privilege tax on corporations, not otherwise specifically required to pay a license tax, does not apply to a street railroad which has paid a license tax under the terms of another statute.¹⁷

In the absence of constitutional restrictions, such fee or tax may be imposed directly by the legislature,¹⁸ or the legislature may delegate such authority to the municipality,¹⁹ pursuant to, and in conformity with, which authority the municipality may act.²⁰

Trackless trolleys

(1) Companies transporting passengers by means of gasoline motor-busses and trackless trolley busses were not street railroad companies and, hence, were not taxable under statutes relating to public utilities. —Akron Transp. Co. v. Glander, 99 N.E.2d 493, 155 Ohio St. 471.

(2) The statute relating to licensing of vehicles discloses legislative intent to tax all vehicles within definition of a "street and suburban bus" notwithstanding some vehicles, such as trackless trolley coaches, do not come within classification of motor vehicles, trailers, or semitrailers. —Dallas Ry. & Terminal Co. v. Gentle, Tex.Civ.App., 218 S.W.2d 259, error refused.

(3) Electrically operated trackless trolley coaches were properly subjected to registration and license fees under the statute as "street and suburban busses;" and an electrically operated trackless trolley coach is not within the exemption from registration in favor of vehicles merely operating across a highway or in favor of certain implements of husbandry. —Dallas Ry. & Terminal Co. v. A municipality cannot impose a license fee or tax which affects existing rights;²¹ but a contract conferring the right to operate a street railroad without dispensing with the payment of a license is not impaired by the exaction of such a license,²² and, where the grant is for a term of years on payment of a stated license fee, the company is not liable for such fee after the term has expired, without a renewal.²³ A license tax may be imposed by a municipality on a street railroad company, on the business done in such municipality, although the lines of the company extend beyond the municipal limits,²⁴ but not in so far as the street railroad does an interurban business similar to that of steam railroads;²⁵ and it has been held that such a tax cannot be imposed on a company which does not occupy a street subject to the control of the municipality, although it is within the municipal limits,²⁶ as where its tracks are located only upon private property or turnpike roads acquired by the company by purchase or condemnation.²⁷

License fee or tax as condition to grant or consent. Under its power to grant or consent to the construction and operation of a street railroad in the streets, a municipality may, as a condition to such grant or consent, require that the company shall pay a license fee or tax;²⁸ and if the company accepts the grant burdened with such a condition, it accepts also the condition and makes a complete and valid contract with respect to the license fee or tax imposed,²⁹ although other companies operating cars in the same municipality are required to pay lower fees.³⁰ Where there are constitutional prohibitions against a municipality granting exemptions from taxation, the municipality has no power to contract that a specified license tax to be paid by the railway shall be in lieu of all taxes other than ad valorem taxes on its realty and personalty.³¹

The liability for such fee or tax attaches to a successor or lessee company which acquires the lines and assumes the obligations of the company to which the grant was made,³² the liability thus attaching in some jurisdictions, even though the lease is silent with respect thereto;³³ in the latter case the liability of the lessee for the license tax attaches only as to that accruing subsequent to the lease but not as to fees which have accrued against the lessor prior to the lease.³⁴

Purpose of fee or tax. Although it has been stated that, under its general police power, a municipality has no power to impose a license fee on cars of a company operating under an existing franchise,³⁵ it is more generally held that a municipality may, under its general police powers, impose a license fee or tax on a street railroad company as a police regulation,³⁶ and if authorized by statute may impose such a tax as a source of municipal revenue;³⁷ but it cannot impose a license tax for purposes of revenue as a police regulation or under a general power to license and regulate,³⁸ although, if the sum charged as a police regulation is a reasonable one, the fact that it incidentally increases the revenue of the municipal treasury will not invalidate it.³⁹

Amount of fee or tax; reasonableness. Where the power of imposing such a license fee or tax is vested in the municipality, the amount thereof rests in the first instance within its discretion, and it may impose such fees or taxes as in its opinion the public interests require,⁴⁰ and it may from time to time, in its discretion, increase or diminish the amount of such fee or tax;⁴¹ and, in the absence of abuse or fraud, the courts will not interfere with the exercise of such discretion.⁴²

The amount of such fee or tax, however, must be reasonable,⁴³ and, if there is a manifest abuse of discretion or fraud, the courts are justified in interfering.⁴⁴ The elements which enter into the reasonableness of such a fee or tax are the necessary or probable expenses incident to the issuing of the license, and the probable expense of proper inspection, regulation, and police surveillance,⁴⁵ each case to be determined on its own facts;⁴⁶ the municipality may fix the amount of such fee in advance without waiting until the end of the period for which the license is granted,⁴⁷ and may make the charge large enough to carry any reasonable anticipated expense,⁴⁸ and such charge cannot be avoided because it subsequently appears that it was somewhat in excess of the actual expense.⁴⁹

§ 176. — Payment and Collection

The amount of tax to be paid by a street railroad company depends on the terms of the particular statute, ordinance, or franchise; and if a fee or tax is not paid when due, an action at law will lie for the recovery thereof.

The amount to be paid by a street railroad company depends on the terms of the particular statute, ordinance, or franchise,⁵⁰ and if any ambiguity exists therein as to the amount of the fee to be paid, the greater amount should be adopted.⁵¹ If such fee or tax is not paid when due, the tax bills bear interest like other taxes.⁵²

A municipality is not estopped to recover a license fee or tax by reason of the fact that it has failed for some years to assert its right thereto,⁵³

Police power purpose

Ordinance amending earlier street railroad franchise grant by increasing annual license fee for each car is subject to interpretation that it was intended to apply only to a proper police power purpose, and it is not invalid on ground that fee is intended for the purpose of defraying cost of services unrelated to any regulatory function under police power.—Minneapolis St. Ry. Ordinance increasing annual license fee for each car is a valid exercise of police power, provided such increase is necessary to defray the reasonable cost of police power regulation, and ordinance does not impair any obligations of contract or deprive street railroad of property without due process of law in violation of either federal Constitution or state Constitution.—Minneapolis St. Ry. or by reason of the fact that for several years it has accepted a lesser amount than that due it,⁵⁴ or by the fact that it has neglected part of its supervisory duty during the year.⁵⁵ On the other hand, a railway company which has constructed a connecting road under statutory provision is not estopped to deny liability to pay the same percentage on its income as to such connecting route as it was liable to pay on its original route, because of having voluntarily made such payment, where the payment was not imposed by the commissioners as a condition of fixing the route and no statutory liability to pay exists.⁵⁶

Collection. Where the statute imposing the fee states that payment shall be made in such manner as it may thereafter direct, the legislature must be held distinctly to have refused to provide for payment in accordance with existing laws so that the city is not authorized to collect the compensation provided for in accordance with existing general provisions of law for the payment, receipt, and disbursement of the city revenues;⁵⁷ under such statute, the company cannot be placed in default because of a refusal to pay the compensation provided for until the legislature has given further directions providing for the time and manner of payment.⁵⁸

If the fee or tax is not paid when due, an action at law will lie for the recovery thereof,⁵⁹ in which case the rules as to penal actions or suits to recover a tax have no application.⁶⁰ The burden is on the tax collector to establish the basis for judgment in a suit to enforce the payment of a license tax.⁶¹ On the other hand, where a corporation comes within the terms of the statute imposing the tax, the burden is on the company to show its exemption from the tax where such is claimed.⁶²

Where the statute provides that compensation be paid to abutting owners by the street railroad, amounts paid as damages to such abutting owners cannot be set up as a counterclaim in an action to recover the percentage on net income required by such statute.⁶³ In an action to recover the percentage on gross receipts required by statute, damages because of the passage of a prior void ordinance cannot be set up as a counterclaim.⁶⁴

Some statutes or ordinances providing for such fees or taxes exact a penalty as a means of enforcing the taking out of a license and the paying of the license fee,⁶⁵ and under such a provision mandamus will not lie to enforce the requirements thereof.⁶⁶ The fact that there is an ordinance imposing a penalty for a failure to procure a certificate for a license does not operate to prevent the city from maintaining an action against the railroad company to recover such license fees.⁶⁷

Release. The lapse of time, short of limitations, during which the fee has not been paid, merely raises a rebuttable presumption of fact as to a release,⁶⁸ and since such lapse of time is merely evidence of a release, it cannot operate to defeat a claim for the fee on demurrer.⁶⁹ Where the statute imposing the license fee or tax prohibits the release of any of the amount due, the railway cannot defend on an account stated or accord and satisfaction based on a payment to the municipality of less than what is actually due.⁷⁰

Application of payments. Payments of a license fee or tax are to be applied as of the date made, extinguishing principal and interest under the ordinary rule as to partial payments.⁷¹

Payment under mistake. Where payment of a license tax is made under the mistaken belief that the ordinance imposing it was existing and valid, credit for such payment will be given to the company against subsequent taxes imposed under new statutes which rendered invalid the prior ordinance;⁷² but, where the railway company is under no statutory liability to pay, the amounts so paid cannot be recovered back as involuntary payments.⁷³

B. DUTY TO OPERATE AND DISCONTINUANCE

§ 177. Duty to Operate

In the exercise of its rights, privileges, and franchises a street railroad company has a duty to operate its road.

A street railroad company occupies a dual relation, a public relation to the people and a private one to its stockholders.⁷⁴ In its public relation it is the duty of the company in the exercise of its rights, privileges, and franchises for the benefit of the public to maintain and operate its road according to the terms of the ordinance or statute which confers such right, privileges, and franchises on it,⁷⁵ which duty transcends its duty to its stockholders.⁷⁶ The acceptance by a traction company of an ordinance authorizing and requiring it to operate a street railroad constitutes an enforceable contract, as considered supra § 35, and when, therefore, the company has commenced operation, it is its duty to continue to operate such road,⁷⁷ and, except as to such portions as public convenience and safety demand should be abandoned,⁷⁸ ordinarily it has no right at its mere will and discretion to abandon the operation of the road or any portion thereof,⁷⁹ without the consent of the granting power,⁸⁰ or of the public utility commission having jurisdiction of the matter.⁸¹

The duty resting on the company must be performed or its privileges and franchises surrendered;⁸² as long as it retains any of the benefits, it must perform all obligations imposed by the contract.⁸³ It may not, by its own acts, render itself unable to perform the functions which were in consideration of the public grant.⁸⁴

The company cannot assume to discharge its duty to the public, on and off, as it may find it profitable to do so,⁸⁵ and it has been held that it may be compelled to continue the service of a part of its line, although the operation of that particular part involves a loss,⁸⁶ and even though the system, as a whole, fails to earn a fair return on the value of the property.⁸⁷ It cannot, however, in the absence of a contract, be compelled to continue to operate its system at a loss;⁸⁸ and it has been held that it cannot be compelled so to operate a portion of its system, where such portion can be operated only at a loss,⁸⁹ notwithstanding such loss could be offset by the profit derived from the operation of the rest of the system.⁹⁰ So, also, it has been held that, where the operation of a portion of a system causes the whole system to be operated at a loss⁹¹ or would result in the insolvency of the whole system,⁹² the courts will not compel the operation of such portion. Moreover, a street railroad company cannot be required to continue indefinitely operations, where such operations will result in the exhaustion of its assets,⁹³ although it may as to a portion of the line, which was formerly a successful operating unit, where it does not appear that profitable operation thereof may not be resumed independently of the remainder of the system.⁹⁴

An implied contract that a street railroad company will operate at a loss cannot be elicited from the acceptance of its charter or from the exercise of power of eminent domain.—Hessey v. Capital Transit Co., 66 A.2d 787, 193 Md. 265, 10 A.L.R.2d 1114.

After the franchises for some of the lines have expired, continuance of service cannot be required thereon on terms not allowing a reasonable return on investment.⁹⁵ Where the company is bound to secure its charter before it can apply to the municipality for consent to use its streets, the charter of itself is not mandatory on the company to operate a railroad.⁹⁶

Successor. The duty of a street railroad company to operate its lines extends to a company which succeeds to the rights, franchises, and obligations of the original company.⁹⁷ In the absence of an obligation to operate under the original franchise, however, a successor assignee of such franchise is not obliged to operate the street railway system for the full franchise period.⁹⁸

§ 178. — Relief from Performance of Duty

A street railroad company will not be relieved of its duty to the public by any cause which does not constitute a legal excuse for failure to perform the duty.

A street railroad company cannot excuse its failure to perform its duty to operate on the ground that it has been prevented by violence from doing so, if the civil authorities have not failed to protect it fully in its efforts to operate,⁹⁹ or on the ground that it cannot get employees to accept its terms.¹ The fact that the located route of the road is laid across a bridge, over which the authorities will not permit tracks to be laid does not excuse the company from failure to operate cars through the streets on either side of the bridge;² and a provision in an ordinance granting a franchise that the company shall not be required to operate its lines or any part or portion thereof at a loss only permits discontinuance of the entire system or any entire unit,³ and does not authorize discontinuance of a part of a unit.⁴

Operation of bus line is not a compliance with a franchise requiring the operation of a street railway,⁵ and it has been held that neither a public utility commission nor the courts may authorize the substitution of busses for the streetcars required by the franchise.⁶

Contract not created by ordinance

City ordinance, requiring street railway company to operate branch lines, did not create contract requiring operation under circumstances which would result in confiscation of the company's property.—Crawford v. Duluth St. Ry. Co., C.C.A.Wis., 60 F.2d 212.

§ 179. — Proceedings to Compel Operation

Operation of a street railroad may be compelled by appropriate proceedings brought for such purpose.

The power to compel the operation of a street railway line, or part thereof, arises out of the public interest with which the service is clothed, and is derivable solely from the police power of the state.⁷ Proceedings to compel operation of a street railroad may be maintained in appropriate cases,⁸ as where the continued operation of the company's facilities is required under its charter and franchise,⁹ and performance of its duty to operate may, in a proper case, be compelled by mandamus, as discussed in Mandamus § 231 e. Discontinuance may be enjoined at the suit of a landowner who has dedicated streets in consideration of an agreement to operate a line thereon,¹⁰ and made investments and built houses along the line,¹¹ where its operation would not prevent performance of the company's larger duty to the public;¹² and the landowner is not, in such case, limited to an action of breach of the contract.¹³ A mandatory injunction to compel operation of a branch line should not, however, be granted where such branch could not be operated without imperiling the financial stability of the entire system.¹⁴ Where no public injury will result from the proposed action of a street railroad company to discontinue the use of a portion of its facilities, such discontinuance will not be prevented by injunction.¹⁵ In a suit to enjoin abandonment of a portion of a street railroad system, it has been held that the court will inquire into the benefit to the public to be attained by continued operation,¹⁶

may properly consider competent and material evidence relating to the loss sustained by the operation of such portion,¹⁷ and, where such railroad is being operated by a public corporation, such as a city, should give great weight to the action of the city council directing abandonment of such portion.¹⁸

Review. Under a statute empowering a commission to compel operation of the lines of a street railroad, where the determination of such commission is sustained by competent evidence, and the commission in making it was within its jurisdiction, such determination will not be disturbed.¹⁹

§ 180. Interference with Operation

Members of the public have no right to use or occupy a street in such manner as to interfere with the operations of street railroads thereon.

Members of the public have no right to use or occupy a street in such manner as to exclude or unreasonably to interfere with the operation of a street railroad lawfully constructed and operating thereon,²⁰ and the street railroad company accordingly has the right to make reasonable regulations governing persons making an extraordinary use of the street, as for example, moving a building across the tracks,²¹ and may maintain a suit for an injunction to restrain a wrongful interference with, or invasion of, its rights,²² or an action to recover damages for a trespass.²³ The company has no right, however, to use undue force in removing an obstruction,²⁴ and if it does so is liable for any damages thereby done to property removed.²⁵

§ 181. Discontinuance of Operation

- a. In general
- b. Power to permit

a. In General

Generally, street railroads cannot discontinue operations at their own mere will or discretion, but are required first to get permission from some designated authority.

While the view has been taken that, subject to the provisions of their charters and other statutes²⁶ or except as precluded therefrom by the terms of their franchises,²⁷ street railroad companies may voluntarily discontinue in whole or in part the use of their tracks, more particularly where the operation would not be remunerative,²⁸ it is more generally held that they cannot do so at their own mere will or discretion,²⁹ although the portion which they may desire to abandon is unprofitable,³⁰ or is more difficult to operate,³¹ and that in order to justify abandonment the company must obtain consent for it to abandon from some authorized source, such as the state,³² a municipality to whom the power to give consent is delegated, expressly or by necessary implication,³³ a public service commission vested with power to give consent,³⁴ or a court designated by statute.³⁵ Where, however, such consent has been obtained, abandonment is lawful notwithstanding the opposition of abutting owners who would be unfavorably affected thereby.³⁶

Public corporation. A distinction has been drawn between the duty of a private corporation and that of a public corporation operating street railroads.³⁷ Where the latter acquires a street railway system free and clear of all franchise obligations, with full power to regulate and control its use and operation, it may abandon a part of the system where it does not do so arbitrarily or capriciously.³⁸ It has been held, however, that a municipality cannot summarily abandon a portion of a municipally owned and operated system.³⁹ Where the street railway system is being operated by a public corporation, such as a city, the action of its council in deciding to abandon a portion of such system is entitled to great weight.⁴⁰

Contractual provisions. The right to abandon an uncompleted part of a road may be conferred by contract on a street railroad company.⁴¹ Under statute authorizing a street railroad company and a municipality to agree on terms for the use and occupation of its streets, the company may be entitled, under a contract so providing, to abandon

Reasonableness of city action

Regulatory power, conferred on city council by statute forbidding abandonment of any part of street railway without consent of city, is subject to limitation that order requiring continued operation must not be unreasonable.—Crawford v. Duluth St. Ry. Co., C.C.A.Wis., 60 F.2d 212.

Restriction to voluntary abandonment

A statutory requirement for approval of public service commission before carrier may abandon exercise of any franchise relates to mere voluntary action by carrier, and not to abandonment required by prior authorized contract or by operation of law, so that such approval is not required for abandonment of lines on streets in city by interurban electric railway pursuant to contractual obligation under ordinance.—R. E. Duvall Co. v. Washington, B. & A. Electric R. Co., D.C.Md., 60 F.2d 315.

the use of the municipal streets for railroad purposes.⁴²

Presumption of abandonment. A right granted to a street railroad company to occupy a certain street not limited as to time is presumed to have been abandoned by the company, where no rights were exercised thereunder for almost twenty-four years.⁴³ Also, it has been held that a presumption of abandonment of the grant is raised by a failure for twenty years to operate a railroad on certain streets included in the franchise.⁴⁴

Temporary suspension of the use of a track, because of possible danger to workmen on the street, will not be required where the danger can be avoided by regulating the passage of the cars.⁴⁵

Abandonment of location. A location for a street railroad, granted by the selectmen of a town, is not abandoned by the president's unauthorized notification to the selectmen of an abandonment and request that the location be granted to another company, although it does not appear that all the conditions of the grant have been performed, since abandonment is necessarily a corporate act.⁴⁶

The state, in the exercise of its sovereign power, may permit street railroad companies to discontinue operations, or may delegate power to grant or withhold permission to some public body, such as a commission.

The state, in the exercise of its sovereign power of regulation, may, under proper conditions, permit the abandonment by street railroads of the continuance of their facilities,⁴⁷ as, for example, to avoid confiscation,⁴⁸ although there is a constitutional provision that no street railway shall be constructed within the limits of any municipality without the consent of the local authorities,⁴⁹ and in doing so cannot be regarded as impairing the obligation of a contract contained in the franchise granted by the municipal authorities.⁵⁰ The power of the state to grant or withhold permission to abandon or discontinue operation of a street railroad system or a part thereof may be vested in public utility commissions.⁵¹ Such commissions have only such powers as are conferred on them by the legislature,⁵² or as are necessarily incidental to full exercise of powers granted.⁵³ Power of such commissions may include power to impose reasonable conditions on permission to discontinue service,⁵⁴ but in imposing conditions the commis-

Discontinuance of service

Where superior court granted supersedeas to street railway company permitting the discontinuance of service pending disposition of company's application for certificate for abandonment, the fact that under the supersedeas the company had discontinued service did not deprive public utility commission of jurisdiction to impose conditions deemed reasonable in connection with the abandonment, on theory that after the discontinuance of the service company ceased to be a utility within the commission's jurisdiction.—West Penn Rys. Co. v. Pennsylvania Public Utility Commission, supra.

Particular conditions

(1) Conditions requiring payment of certain sum to city, removal of tracks, repaving of disturbed area, and removal of poles and wires were held beyond the power of a commission to impose where not supported by evidence.—West Penn Rys. Co. v. Public Utility Commission, 4 A.2d 545, 135 Pa.Super. 89.

(2) An order authorizing abandonment of portion of a line in a municipality is not unlawful because conditioned on the paving of the street by the municipality where such portion is located.—State ex rel. City of Kirkwood v. Public Service Commission of Missouri, 50 S.W.2d 114, 330 Mo. 507.

Substituted service

(1) An order authorizing abandonment of a railway line, or a portion thereof, may be conditioned on substituted service being furnished.—State ex rel. City of Kirkwood v. Public Service Commission of Missouri, supra.

(2) Order that company be authorized to abandon particular electric railway line coincident with, or subsequent to, institution of bus route was construed as seeking to insure that railway patrons would not be

sion must not raise the standard of duty fixed by law,⁵⁵ or interfere with the constitutional and statutory powers of municipalities.⁵⁶ The conditions imposed need not be confined to matters of service,⁵⁷ and may in a proper case relate to the safety of the public.⁵⁸ Authority vested in a board of county commissioners to authorize construction and maintenance of railroads on county roads does not authorize them, either expressly or by necessary implication, to consent to the abandonment of a street railroad line.⁵⁹ Where a statute requires the consent of the municipality to the abandonment or discontinuance of any part of its railroad on a street, the railroad commission in the absence of a statute conferring such authority is without power to authorize such abandonment or discontinuance without the consent of the municipality.⁶⁰

§ 182. — Proceedings to Discontinue Operation

Some statutes endow boards or commissions with Jurisdiction of proceedings to discontinue street railroad operations.

Some statutes endow boards or commissions with jurisdiction of proceedings to allow a street railroad company to abandon or prevent it from abandoning its road, or a portion thereof.⁶¹ The company has the burden of proving by clear and satisfactory evidence that the granting of permission by the commission to discontinue is required by, or is consistent with, the public interest.⁶² In determining whether a particular line can be operated without a loss, the cost of operation includes a fair proportion of the expenses incurred for the entire system of which the line forms a part.⁶³ Although the commission hearing an application for discontinuance may order a valuation of all property to determine whether the company is operating at a loss, it is not obliged so to do.⁶⁴ The findings of the commission are entitled to great weight;⁶⁵ its orders will be presumed to be based on facts,⁶⁶ and are conclusive against collateral attack.⁶⁷ abandoned until substituted service by motorbus was in operation.—Chicago & Milwaukee Elec. Ry. Co. v. Public Service Commission of Wisconsin, 37 N.W.2d 42, 254 Wis. 551.

Temporary service

An order permitting discontinuance, because of loss in operation, may require operation for such time as will enable the company's patrons to adjust themselves to the changed conditions.—New York Trust Co. v. Buffalo, etc., Traction Co., 183 N.Y.S. 278, 112 Misc. 414.

Jurisdiction of questions based on contract

The question of binding effect of contracts under which street railroad company seeking to abandon service was using tracks was one of law not cognizable by Public Utility Commission in passing on application for a certificate authorizing abandonment of service and the commission did not act improperly in refusing to require the company to remove certain tracks, where question of ownership of tracks involved was not clear on face of contracts and franchises under which the company used the tracks.—Borough of Irwin v. Sufficiency of evidence

Where the commission has no jurisdiction to relieve the company of the duty of maintaining its tracks, it is without power to modify its order requiring reconstruction of such tracks.⁶⁸

A court of equity taking jurisdiction to enforce the performance of a contract to operate a street or interurban railroad will retain jurisdiction for the purpose of authorizing the owner thereof to discontinue its operation, where no contractual obligation is found to exist, and there is no prospect that the road can be made to earn a fair return on the investment.⁶⁹

Review. Under some statutes only interested parties are entitled to appeal from a ruling of the Public Service Commission,⁷⁰ and one not so entitled cannot maintain proceedings for suspension of an order of the commission pending perfection of an appeal.⁷¹ On a proper showing, a rule to show cause why certiorari should not be allowed to review the decision of the public utility commission approving suspension of service will be granted.⁷² When the statutes so provide, the review of the action of the commission takes the form of a hearing de novo, and the same facts are considered, and like principles of law are applicable in such review as would be in an independent action before the reviewing court if such action could be brought.⁷³ An order of the commission refusing to approve abandonment will not be disturbed where the evidence is conflicting,⁷⁴ but an order which is not supported by the evidence cannot be upheld.⁷⁵

§ 183. — Effect of Discontinuance

At common law on abandonment of its street railroad the company is obliged to remove its tracks and track structures forthwith.

Where a street railroad company ceases its operation and the rendering of service to the public in a municipality, it has been held that pertinent franchises, ordinances, and contracts between the company and the municipality are determinative of the respective rights and obligations,⁷⁶ and that they may not be varied or set aside and other rights granted and obligations imposed.⁷⁷ On abandonment of its street railroad the company is obliged to remove its tracks and track structures forthwith;⁷⁸ this obligation exists at common law,⁷⁹ and in the absence of any specifically stated obligation in the franchise.⁸⁰ It is also the company's duty to restore the pavement of the invaded street or highway to the condition of the adjacent pavement as discussed supra § 121. Equity has jurisdiction to compel the company to perform its duty in this respect.⁸¹

§ 184. — Remedies in Case of Unauthorized Discontinuance

Where a street railroad company discontinues operations without authority, it may be compelled by appropriate remedy to resume such operations.

Where a street railroad company, or other operating authority, attempts to evade its duty by abandoning its road, or a part of it, it may be compelled, in proper proceedings, to resume its operation and carry out the public duty assumed by it,⁸² and mandamus⁸³ or, under statute, a proceeding in certiorari,⁸⁴ may be a proper proceeding for this purpose. Under statutes providing for review by certiorari, a denial of an application to review the action of a municipal board in discontinuing service on a portion of a municipally owned streetcar system has been held improper,⁸⁵

notwithstanding a statement by such board that the discontinuance of service is merely temporary;⁸⁶ and the duty of the court in such case is to take testimony to determine whether the suspension of service is arbitrary and has continued for an unreasonable time.⁸⁷ In an action for damages against a street railroad company for discontinuing service, plaintiff must introduce the franchise in evidence so that the rights, duties, and liabilities may be determined therefrom.⁸⁸ In such an action the measure of damages, where the abandonment was not permanent, is the amount that will reimburse plaintiff for the inconvenience and the loss incident thereto during the period of the discontinuance,⁸⁹ and not the difference between the value of the property with the streetcar service and the value thereof with it permanently discontinued.⁹⁰

C. OPERATION

1. COMPANIES AND PERSONS LIABLE FOR INJURIES

§ 185. In General

A street railroad company is liable for any neglect in the exercise of its franchise, and cannot, without legislative authority, terminate its liability.

As a general rule a street railroad company assumes by the acceptance of the grant of its franchise from the state or municipality a duty toward the public of seeing that its franchise is properly exercised, and therefore is liable for any neglect thereof,⁹¹ and cannot, without legislative or municipal authority, permit another company or person to exercise its franchise so as to avoid the liabilities incident thereto;⁹² and so a company, agreeing with another company for the joint use of its tracks, is liable for injuries caused by the actionable negligence of its licensee,⁹³ and where two companies jointly operate a street railroad, partly owned by each, each is liable for the negligence of the other in the operation thereof.⁹⁴ A company using or operating a street railroad, although not the owner thereof, is liable for its own negligence or that of its own servants,⁹⁵ but a company acting as agent, and not as owner pro hac vice, is not liable for the negligence of employees of its principal.⁹⁶ So a company which is merely using the track of another company, without any obligation to keep the track in repair or any right to interfere therewith, is not liable for defects in the street or track;⁹⁷ nor is a succeeding company ordinarily liable for injuries caused by the negligence or improper operation of the road by its predecessor.⁹⁸ A stockholder in the corporation operating the road is not liable for its negligent acts.⁹⁹

Joint tort-feasors. Where the injury was caused by the concurrent negligence of the streetcar company and another, both are liable;¹ but the company, on payment of the judgment, is entitled to indemnity from the other where it is not in pari delicto with him, and he is the real party at fault.² Where the acts of the streetcar company and another are different and separate, there is no joint liability.³

Owner or receiver. Unless such liability is imposed by statute,⁴ where a street railroad has been placed in the hands of a receiver, the company owning it is not liable for injuries due to the negligence of the receiver or his employees,⁵ and the receiver is liable therefor in his official capacity.⁶ If, however, the receiver abandons a part of the road to the company, it is thereafter liable for negligent acts or omissions with respect to such part;⁷ and, if the company was actually operating the road, the receiver is not liable for negligence therein⁸ although the title to the road was vested in him.⁹

Mortgagee. A mortgagee obtaining possession of street railroad property on default is considered a trustee and is not liable for torts arising out of the use of the property in the business.¹⁰

§ 186. Company or Municipality

A street railroad company is liable for injuries caused by a failure to keep its tracks in repair, and may be liable for a failure to keep the street in repair, but it is not liable for the negligence of the municipal authorities.

A street railroad company is liable for injuries caused by a failure to keep its tracks in repair,¹¹ or by a failure to keep the street in repair, where, under the terms of its grant, or by statute or ordinance, it is under the duty to repair it,¹² although the municipality is also negligent in permitting the defect to remain in the street,¹³ or although the defective condition in fact results from a failure of the municipality to keep its street in repair;¹⁴ but the company is not liable for the negligence of the municipal authorities,¹⁵ and, although it is under the duty to repair the streets, it is not liable for a defect which is one of construction by the municipality, for which the municipality alone is responsible, and which the company is not at liberty to alter,¹⁶ unless it has assumed the duty of protecting travelers therefrom.¹⁷ A grant, however, to a street railroad company of the privilege of constructing its tracks in the streets and running cars thereon does not exonerate the municipality from liability for failing to keep its streets in proper repair should the company fail to do so, as discussed in Municipal Corporations § 797, but, if the municipality is compelled to pay damages in such a case by reason of the negligence or default of the street railroad company, it may recover over against the company.¹⁸

§ 187. Lessor and Lessee

Where the lease of a street railroad is unauthorized, the lessor remains liable for the lessee's torts in operating the road; where the lease is authorized, the authorities differ as to the lessor's liability.

As a general rule a street railroad company cannot, without legislative or municipal authority, divest itself of any of the duties and liabilities incident to the maintenance and operation of its road by leasing the road to another,¹⁹ and, hence, if the lease is unauthorized, the lessor company will remain liable for the torts of the lessee in the operation of the road;²⁰ and it has been held that the lessor is so liable, without express reference to whether or not the lease was authorized.²¹ Where, however, there is legislative or municipal authority for the lease, the question of the liability of the lessor for the torts of the lessee is one on which there is a great diversity of judicial opinion.²² In some jurisdictions it is held that, where there is legislative or municipal authority for the lease, the lessor company is thereby absolved from liability for the torts of the lessee company,²³ unless such liability is expressly reserved in the statute or ordinance²⁴ or the lease is to an irresponsible company,²⁵ or unless the control of the road is reserved by the lessor, in the lease.²⁶ In other jurisdictions, however, it is held that, although there is legislative or municipal authority for the lease, the lessor is not absolved from liability unless in addition to such authority there is a provision expressly exempting the lessor from liability,²⁷ notwithstanding the lessee agrees to assume all liability;²⁸ and the fact that the lessee abandons a single track as leased and lays a double track at its own expense, as provided by the lease, does not absolve the lessor from liability.²⁹ It is well settled, however, that the lessee company is liable for all injuries caused by its own negligence or that of its servants in the operation of the leased road;³⁰ but it is not liable for injuries caused by the negligence of an assignee of the lease or of the assignee's servants,³¹ or for torts committed by the lessor prior to the execution of the lease unless such liability is assumed in the lease.³²

Negligence of receiver. Neither the lessor nor the lessee of a street railroad is liable for the negligent maintenance or operation of the road while in the hands of a receiver.³³

§ 188. Vendor and Purchaser

The vendor of a street railroad and its franchise is not liable for an injury occurring after it has parted with possession and control, although it may be liable for injuries resulting from improper construction. The purchaser is liable for damages caused by its own negligence or for damages which occurred prior to acquisition where such liability is assumed.

A street railroad company which has lawfully sold and delivered its road and franchises to another company is not liable for an injury due to the negligence or improper operation of the road occurring after it has parted with its ownership, operation, and control,³⁴ although it may be liable for injuries due to the fact that the road was not properly constructed at the time of delivery.³⁵ The purchaser of a street railroad is liable for damages caused by its own negligence the same as any other owning company;³⁶ and, where the sale is a judicial one, the court in ordering the sale may impose a liability for past damages on the purchaser as a part of the consideration for the purchase.³⁷

2. CARE REQUIRED AND LIABILITY IN GENERAL

If a street railroad company, through its servants and agents, fails to exercise the degree of care required in the management and operation of its road and cars, it is guilty of negligence and is liable for the injuries caused thereby to property and persons.

If a street railroad company, through its servants and agents, fails to exercise the degree of care required in the management and operation of its road and cars, it is guilty of negligence and liable for the injuries caused thereby to property³⁸ or persons,³⁹ and this liability is sometimes expressly imposed on the company by ordinance or statute.⁴⁰ The fact that a street railroad company received its franchise from the municipality does not exempt it from liability for its negligence.⁴¹ A street railroad company is not, however, an insurer against every casualty which may happen, or liable for an injury attributable to a mere accident which ordinary vigilance could not avoid⁴² or which cannot be attributed to want of care on its part;⁴³ nor can negligence on its part be inferred from the mere happening of the injury, as discussed infra § 305. To run a car in one direction on a track generally used for cars going in the opposite direction is not negligence in itself, independent of other circumstances and conditions,⁴⁴ nor are maintaining and using a switch which projects out into the public highway,⁴⁵ or the failure to run cars on such switch with, rather than against, traffic.⁴⁶ The primary duty assumed by railway corporations, by the acceptance of their charters, to operate their roads so as to afford reasonable protection to the public imposes on them the correlative duty to adopt and enforce reasonable rules tending to that end;⁴⁷ but the company's omission to promulgate such rules has no bearing on its legal responsibility for its alleged negligence.⁴⁸

Violation of statute or ordinance. Although it has been stated that the violation of a legislative enactment, prescribing merely a general rule of conduct and not a specific requirement to do or not to do a particular act, does not constitute negligence per se,⁴⁹ the failure of a street railroad company to perform a duty imposed by a valid⁵⁰ ordinance or statute is ordinarily such negligence as will render it liable for the injuries resulting therefrom,⁵¹ notwithstanding a fine is also imposed for such failure;⁵² but the circumstances may be such as to make the violation not necessarily negligence.⁵³ A general penal ordinance regulating the operation of streetcars, but conferring no particular benefits on persons injured by a violation of such ordinance, and not even making such violation negligence, confers no right of action on persons injured by its violation,⁵⁴ and the violation of a general ordinance, which is not made a part of the ordinance granting the company's franchise, does not authorize a recovery for injuries or death caused by such violation, unless the company has agreed to such ordinance or contracted to be bound thereby.⁵⁵

Noise. Where no physical injury results, the noise caused by the operation of a street railroad furnishes the owner of property adjoining the premises upon which the railroad is operated no sufficient basis for the recovery of damages.⁵⁶

Vibrations. Since vibrations from a carefully operated street railroad which caused damage to abutting property are damnum absque injuria,⁵⁷ negligence in the operation or construction of the street railroad must be shown in order to justify a recovery for damages caused by vibrations in the operation of the road.⁵⁸

Transportation of freight. The unauthorized transportation of freight for hire for others over its tracks may constitute negligence which will render the company liable for the resulting injuries;⁵⁹ but this does not apply to the transportation of anything which it is reasonably necessary for the company to transport as incidental to the proper management of its legitimate business.⁶⁰

Opening the car door to permit a passenger to alight from a moving car in the middle of a block, whereby a traveler on the street was injured, has been held to be negligence,⁶¹ but there is also authority to the contrary.⁶²

§ 190. Acts of Servants or Employees

A street railroad company is liable for injuries which are due to the inexperience and incompetency of its servants and for all injurious acts done by its employees within the scope of their employment.

As a general rule it is the duty of a street railroad company to exercise ordinary care to employ sufficient reasonably skilled and competent servants on its cars to operate them in a careful manner so as to prevent injury to persons on the track;⁶³ and, therefore, the company is liable for injuries which are due to the inexperience and incompetency of such servants,⁶⁴ although it has been held that the mere employment or retention in service of a careless or unfit employee does not give rise to a cause of action against the company,⁶⁵ since there must be evidence of some specific act of negligence or incompetency which is the proximate cause of the injury, as discussed infra § 212. A motorman's collapse into unconsciousness from illness, allowing the car to run uncontrolled into a vehicle, is an act of God exculpating the company unless its negligence in placing him in charge of the car with notice of his incompetency was a concurring cause of the casualty.⁶⁶ A single act of negligence on the part of the driver or motorman at any time other than that when the accident happened does not establish unfitness on the part of such driver or motorman.⁶⁷ His unfitness because of illness may be inferred from his physical condition.⁶⁸

Error of judgment in emergency. It is not negligence on the part of a motorman or driver, required to choose instantly one of several methods to avert an injury, to choose one which may not have been the most efficacious.⁶⁹

Scope of employment. A street railroad company is liable for injurious acts done by its employees within the scope of their employment,⁷⁰ whether such acts are willful or negligent,⁷¹ and whether in obedience to, or violation of, special instructions;⁷² but it is not liable for injuries which result from acts which are not within the scope of such employment.⁷³

§ 191. Acts of Third Persons

Generally, a street railroad company is not liable for injuries caused by the negligent or wrongful acts of third persons not in its employ and done without its knowledge or consent.

Generally, a street railroad company is not liable for injuries caused by negligent or wrongful acts of third persons not in its employ and done without its knowledge and consent,⁷⁴ as, for example, a passenger⁷⁵ or a volunteer assisting an employee of an independent contractor.⁷⁶ Where, however, the negligent operation of a streetcar produces an apparent peril, the company may be liable for an injury to a third person by a passenger,⁷⁷ provided the injury was proximately caused by the negligence of the company and was not the result of the independent and intervening act of the passenger, as discussed infra § 212. Furthermore, where the company is negligent in maintaining poles as part of its system it may be liable to a person injured by the fall of a defective pole when struck by a motor vehicle,⁷⁸ provided the omission carefully to maintain such poles could be considered as a substantial concurring cause, as discussed § 212.

§ 192. Degree of Care Required

The general rule is that a street railroad company is required to exercise reasonable or ordinary care in the operation of its cars.

Although it has been said that a street railroad company in the operation of its road in public streets and highways is required to exercise a very high degree of care,⁷⁹ or more care than is usually required on the part of steam railroads operating on their own right of way,⁸⁰ it is not, with respect to the general public in the streets on which it runs, required to exercise as high a degree of care as it owes to passengers on its cars,⁸¹ or as is required of a steam railroad operating its cars on the streets.⁸² The general rule is that a street railroad company is required to exercise that which, under the circumstances, is reasonable⁸³ or ordinary⁸⁴

Snow removal

(1) Although street railroads have care and prudence, operating with regard to known conditions⁸⁵ and taking proper or usual precautions to avoid injury to travelers.⁸⁶ Accordingly, a street railroad company is required to exercise such care and vigilance in the management and operation of its cars to avoid injuring persons rightfully upon such streets or highways as a person of ordinary prudence and capacity may be expected to exercise under the same or similar circumstances.⁸⁷ It is not required to exercise the highest degree,⁸⁸ or the highest practicable degree,⁸⁹ of care, or very high,⁹⁰ high,⁹¹ great,⁹² or special and particular⁹³ care; nor is it bound to guard against unusual and extraordinary dangers.⁹⁴ Furthermore, the street railroad company has no duty to anticipate and provide against every exigency or possible contingency which may suddenly arise in the operation of its lines,⁹⁵ and, in order to import negligence from the action of the operator of a streetcar where danger appears in the way of such car, the danger must be a sufficient distance from the streetcar to give time enough to enable the operator to stop or slow down to avoid the accident.⁹⁶

The care required must be commensurate with the known danger,⁹⁷ and what constitutes ordinary care and prudence within the meaning of the general rule depends on the known and reasonably to be expected hazards and dangers of the particular case,⁹⁸ and varies under different conditions, such as the character of the cars, the agency of propulsion, the locality in which they are operated, whether in the country or in a city, whether over much traveled or unfrequented streets, and the possibility or probability attending their operation,⁹⁹ right to keep their tracks clear of snow, they must exercise ordinary care in their operation, and question whether they have used ordinary care should be decided in light of surrounding circumstances.—Armiger v. Baltimore Transit Co., 196 A. 111, 173 Md. 416.

(2) Snow sweeper, operated by street railway company, was not so dangerous in itself that it should not be transported on public highway without unusual care for safety of travelers going in same direction.—Overstreet v. Illinois Power & Light Corporation, 190 N.E. 676, 356 Ill. 378.

as that which under some conditions will be ordinary and reasonable care may under other conditions amount even to gross negligence.¹ Thus, as compared with the usual operation of a car under ordinary conditions, ordinary care will require a higher degree of diligence and prudence where there is an increase of danger,² as in proceeding in one direction on a track generally used for cars going in the opposite direction,³ or at a crossing of intersecting streets,⁴ at the crossing of two street railroads,⁵ on obstructed streets,⁶ or streets in crowded or densely populated portions of a municipality,⁷ or where there are adverse weather⁸ or road⁹ conditions.

Where a street railroad is operated under conditions similar to the operation of steam railroad, general rules as to the care required of such roads are applicable.¹⁰

Statutory precautions to prevent accidents required of railroads have been held applicable to interurban railroads,¹¹ although a doctrine to the contrary is equally supported by authority.¹²

Company rules. Although the existence of company operating rules does not render a violation of such rules by the operator of the streetcar negligence per se,¹³ such violation is evidence of negligence and a circumstance to be considered in determining whether or not the operator was negligent.¹⁴

§ 193. Duties and Care as to Trespassers in General

General rules apply in determining whether a person is a trespasser with respect to a street railroad company, and, generally, no duty exists towards a trespasser except to refrain from willfully or wantonly injuring him.

General rules apply in determining whether a person is a trespasser with respect to a street railroad company.¹⁵ Thus, since the rights of the

In crossing public street from main track to car yard, against traffic between intersections of streets, motorman was required to use high degree of skill and caution to avoid danger or injury to any person or collision with any vehicle on highway.—Baltimore Transit Co. v. Roof steps

Where operator of streetcar, from previous experience, had reason to believe that roof step, instead of being folded against side of streetcar, might be down, extending outward from streetcar, a conclusion was authorized that, when streetcar was in a "tight" place, by the exercise of ordinary care, operator should have determined whether step was down and that failure to do so was negligence, notwithstanding streetcar company had the right to maintain roof steps either open at all times or closed at all times.—Baltimore Transit Co. v. Abutment

Street railway company, owning easement across parking beyond end of street at intersecting street crossed by its tracks, and city, in its proprietary capacity as owner of such parking, were not liable for injuries to motorist driving off abutment of company's trestle over creek running through such parking, in absence of showing that either did anything to invite motorists onto such private property or maintained unsafe condition as near public highway as to render highway itself unsafe, such motorist being merely trespasser.—Hauck v. Kansas City Public Service Co., 200 S.W.2d 608, 239 Mo.App. 1092.

Playing in streets

Children have no right as a matter of law to play in that part of a street where streetcars are passing.—Camardo v. New York State Rys., 159 N.E. 879, 247 N.Y. 111.

Streetcar conductor standing on the company's tracks, not using the street as a traveler and not having the rights of an employee thereon, street railroad company and the traveler on the street to use that part of the street occupied by the street railroad tracks are equal and reciprocal, as discussed infra § 208, a traveler on the street in the exercise of due care going across or along such part of the street when not occupied by cars is not a trespasser,¹⁶ although it has been said he may become one if, after notice, he negligently remains there¹⁷ or if he unreasonably and unnecessarily obstructs the company in using the tracks;¹⁸ but an unregistered automobile unlawfully on the highway has been held a trespasser,¹⁹ as has also a man who lies down on the streetcar track.²⁰ Where the tracks are laid on a private right of way,²¹ or where they are raised above the surface of the street²² or elevated on a trestle,²³ a person or animal on them is a trespasser, notwithstanding the defective condition of the roadway beside the tracks²⁴ or former use.²⁵ However, where the company has improved a crossing on its private right of way for public use and has invited the public to use it, a person injured while attempting to use such crossing is not a trespasser,²⁶ but is a licensee by implied permission, as discussed infra § 194. A person crossing tracks, which are not laid in a public street, is not a trespasser as a matter of law where a public way existed at the place of crossing for several months prior to the accident with the implied permission of the company.²⁷

Persons on cars. Where a person in danger of being run over by a vehicle leaps to the rear platform of a streetcar without intending to become a passenger, he is technically a trespasser,²⁸ as is a newsboy boarding a car to sell papers without intending to pay the fare.²⁹ So a boy who, without the intention of paying fare but with the purpose of stealing a ride, boards a streetcar, and secretes himself from observation so as to avoid detection, is a mere trespasser³⁰ unless his presence on the car be actually known and assented to, either directly or by implication, by the driver or conductor;³¹ but assent to the boy's riding on the car free will not arise by implication from the mere fact that the driver discovered him, and made no demand for fare, when the driver is neither required nor authorized to collect fares.³² The failure of a conductor to collect fare from a person on the platform does not make such person a trespasser, so as to preclude an action for his injuries resulting from his being thrown under the car wheels while is a trespasser.—Manning v. Manchester St. Ry., 118 A. 386, 80 N.H. 404—60 C.J. p 376 note 39.

In Massachusetts

(1) Under statute effecting change in substantive law, person on space in public way expressly reserved for use of street railway company has rights of pedestrian or traveler on highway, and company has obligation to exercise reasonable care to avoid injuring such person regardless of whether person is on reservation for purpose of becoming passenger or after alighting from car.—Sears v. Boston Elevated Ry. Co., 47 N.E.2d 282, 313 Mass. 326.

(2) However, as such statute does not apply to events which occurred prior to its enactment, person injured while travelling across reservation did not have rights of pedestrian under prior statute giving such rights only to person on reservation for purpose of becoming passenger or after alighting from car, and, thus, company was not liable in absence of wanton and reckless misconduct.—Sears v. Boston Elevated Ry. Co., supra.

(3) Prior to statute, person on reservation was considered trespasser or mere licensee and company was liable only for willful, wanton, or reckless misconduct.—Pritchard v. Boston Elevated Ry., 5 N.E.2d 29, 296 Mass. 197—60 C.J. p 375 note 33.

Erection of signs

Where street railway company had improved crossing on private right of way for public use and invited public to use it, the company became bound to use care in operation of streetcars over the crossing, which ordinary prudence and the law demanded, and it could not change motorist from a licensee to a trespasser by signs erected at crossing.—*Mann v. stepping from the car.³³ Where a streetcar is stopped so as to obstruct the passage of a traveler on foot desiring to cross the street, it is not a trespass or wrongful act on his part to step on and pass over the platform of the car in order to avoid the obstruction.³⁴

Care required. As a general rule a street railroad company is under no duty to exercise active vigilance to look out for, and prevent injury to, trespassers on its cars,³⁵ but is bound only to abstain from wantonly, recklessly, or willfully injuring a trespasser, whose presence is known,³⁶ or to exercise reasonable care to avoid injuring him after discovering his peril;³⁷ and the company, therefore, is not liable for injuries caused to a trespasser on a car whose presence or peril is not known,³⁸ or whose injuries are caused without any negligence on the part of the operatives of the car,³⁹ or whose injuries are not the proximate result of such employee's negligent act, as discussed infra § 212. Where the trespasser is a child due regard should be paid, after he is discovered, to the known indiscretion of childhood, and the inability of children to exercise proper precaution for their own safety,⁴⁰ and it is negligence to permit a child to ride on the car and alight therefrom when in motion without endeavoring to restrain him,⁴¹ or to allow him to cling to, and ride on, the coupling bar of a car moving backwards on a switch while the motorman is operating the car from the opposite end and the conductor has alighted,⁴² or to allow him to ride on the steps of the platform, when his presence in a situation thus exposed to danger is actually known or the circumstances are such as will make a failure to note his peril palpable neglect of duty on the part of those having the control of the car.⁴³

In removing or ejecting a trespasser from a car the company's employees may lawfully use only such force as is reasonably necessary to accomplish that object,⁴⁴ and if they use more force than is necessary in removing the trespasser or eject him in a careless and reckless manner whereby he is injured the company is liable therefor.⁴⁵ Thus, a street railroad company is liable for injuries caused to a trespasser, particularly a child, by forcibly ejecting him from a car while it is in motion,⁴⁶ or by so frightening him by gestures or otherwise as to cause him to jump or fall from the car.⁴⁷ An employee is justified, however, in catching hold of, and lecturing, a trespassing boy,⁴⁸ and if he, on being turned loose, runs blindly into an approaching car and is injured, neither the employee nor the company is liable therefor.⁴⁹ So, where an order to get off while the car is moving is not given in such a manner as to intimidate a trespassing boy, and he jumps off because he knows he has no right to be on the car, or because he had been told to get off before the car started, and is thereby injured, the company is not liable.⁵⁰

Boy ten years of age who was clinging to outside of moving streetcar, although in precarious position fraught with perilous possibilities, was not in "imminent peril" within meaning of humanitarian rule, until streetcar motorman, with knowledge of boy's presence, accelerated and jerked the streetcar, and liability of streetcar company for injuries, if any, was not for negligence under the humanitarian rule, but for the primary conduct amounting to negligence, willfulness, wantonness, or recklessness.—McClanahan v. St. Louis Public Service Co., Mo., 251 S.W.2d 704.

As a general rule a street railroad company is under no duty to keep a lookout for trespassers on its track or private right of way at points where it has a right to assume that the track is clear,⁵¹ and this rule applies to children as well as adults,⁵² but it is bound only to abstain from wantonly and willfully injuring such a trespasser⁵³ and to use all proper precautions to avoid injuring him after discovering his peril, as by sounding the gong or whistle and taking proper precautions to stop the car when necessary.⁵⁴ So there is no legal duty to extricate a trespasser placed in a position of imminent peril under the safety guard of a car solely through his own negligence.⁵⁵ Where, however, from the locality and circumstances known to the company there is reason to apprehend that the tracks will not be clear from persons or vehicles,⁵⁶ as where the tracks are so placed in a street as to become a part and parcel of the street,⁵⁷ it is the duty of the driver or motorman to keep a lookout for trespassers on the street, and to use all reasonable precautions on the first appearance of danger to avoid injury;⁵⁸ but such a duty cannot be claimed as owing to a trespasser lying prone on the track or dangerously close to it.⁵⁹

On vehicle colliding with car. The fact that a person is trespassing on a vehicle which collides with a streetcar does not relieve a street railroad company of the duty of exercising reasonable care as to him.⁶⁰

§ 194. Duties and Care as to Licensees in General

As a general rule a street railroad company owes no duty to a mere licensee except to refrain from injuring him wantonly or intentionally, and to avoid injuring him after it discovers his presence and peril.

General rules apply in determining whether a person is a licensee with respect to a street railroad company.⁶¹ Thus, a person climbing a trolley pole to repair a city fire alarm wire attached thereto is a mere licensee of the street railroad company,⁶² and a city employee inspecting track repair work, whose employment does not require him to ride on the work car of the street railway company, entering the car to eat his lunch at the invitation of the company's foreman, is at most a mere licensee;⁶³ but a person on a street for a lawful purpose, who enters on a portion thereof which the city has permitted the street railway company to use, does not thereby become a mere licensee of the company, so as to absolve it from the duty of exercising ordinary care to prevent injury to him.⁶⁴

Where the company has improved a crossing on its private right of way for public use and has invited the public to use it, a person injured while attempting to use such crossing has been held not to be a trespasser, as discussed supra § 193, or a bare licensee,⁶⁵ but a licensee by implied permission.⁶⁶ Furthermore, although statutes, forbidding the public from walking along tracks not laid in the public street, prohibit the creation, even by invitation of the company, of a public way along the tracks,⁶⁷ such statutes do not prohibit the company from inviting or permitting the public to cross the tracks from side to side at a point which is not in a strict sense a public street or highway, and which, through such invitation or permission becomes a way open to public use,⁶⁸ and a person injured while crossing the tracks is not a trespasser as a matter of law where such a public way existed at the place of crossing for several months prior to the accident with the implied permission of the company, as discussed supra § 193.

General rules apply as to the duty of care owed to licensees.⁶⁹ Thus, as a general rule a street railroad company owes no duty to a mere licensee⁷⁰ except to refrain from injuring him wantonly or intentionally,⁷¹ and to exercise ordinary care to avoid injuring him after it discovers his presence and peril;⁷² but, as to a licensee by implied permission, the company is bound to exercise reasonable or due care,⁷³ and it has been held that such duty cannot be changed by erecting signs at the crossing,⁷⁴ although it would seem that permission to cross the tracks at such place may be withdrawn by the company by the proper erection of signs and a fence.⁷⁵

§ 195. Duties and Care as to Invitees

An invitee on street railroad premises is a person whose presence there is in answer to the express or implied invitation of the street railroad company, and for its interest or benefit or for their mutual benefit or interest, and to such a person the railroad company owes the duty of exercising ordinary care to prevent injury.

An invitee on street railroad premises or property is a person whose presence there is in answer to the express or implied invitation of the street railroad company, and for its interest or benefit or for their mutual benefit or interest.⁷⁶ Thus, an employee of a lessee of a news stand crossing a subway platform to buy subway tickets to sell,⁷⁷ or an applicant for position as conductor while being instructed before having received his appointment,⁷⁸ or a consignee of freight invited by the conductor of a trolley freight express car to remove his consignment from it to a wheelbarrow⁷⁹ is an invitee of the company; but a passenger walking through an elevated train to cross the track from one station platform to another is not an invitee where the company has provided a subway passage for the purpose.⁸⁰

Where a person is on a car on the express or implied consent or invitation of the company or of those in charge of the car, within the scope of their employment, although not a passenger, it is bound to exercise ordinary care and diligence for his safety while thereon.⁸¹ The duty of exercising ordinary care to prevent injury is also due to one who is on the company's tracks and right of way or premises on its express or implied invitation.⁸² It has been held that a street railroad company is liable for injuries caused by the negligence of a driver, motorman, or conductor to a person while riding with due care on the platform of a car on the invitation of such an employee without collusion with him to defraud the company,⁸³ and that it is negligence for a street railroad company to permit a child of tender years to ride on the platform of a car.⁸⁴ Where an injury to a child permitted to ride on the platform of a car was not occasioned by the negligence of the motorman or driver, the company is not liable.⁸⁵ A consignee of freight invited by the conductor of a trolley freight express car to remove the freight from it to a wheelbarrow is entitled to an opportunity not only to place the freight on the barrow but to remove himself and the barrow so as to prevent a collision with the car,⁸⁶ and where he was struck by the swing of the starting car while placing the last box on the barrow, without any delay on his part, he is entitled to recover.⁸⁷

§ 196. Construction and Equipment of Cars

Ordinary care and prudence for the safety of pedestrians and vehicles on the street require that a street railroad company exercise reasonable care and diligence to equip and operate its cars with safety appliances for preventing accidents.

Ordinary care and prudence for the safety of pedestrians and vehicles on the street require that a street railroad company exercise reasonable care and diligence to equip and operate its cars with safety appliances for preventing accidents,⁸⁸ such as appliances for controlling and stopping cars,⁸⁹ and to keep such appliances in good condition.⁹⁰ Its duty in this respect is discharged if it uses cars and appliances in general use, which have usually been found adequate and safe,⁹¹ or where it has exercised reasonable care in the inspection of the appliances and they were in reasonably good working condition when last inspected before an accident, the defect not being discovered sufficiently long reasonably to permit the repair thereof, or the discontinuance of the operation of the car.⁹² It is not required to have in use the latest improvements or most modern equipment which skill and ingenuity have devised to prevent accidents,⁹³ or any appliances which have not been tested and put into general use, although approved by the highest scientific authorities.⁹⁴

Where a car is known to be equipped with defective appliances for control, the company is not freed from responsibility for a collision with a person coming suddenly in front of it by the motorman on discovering such person doing all that he could with such appliances;⁹⁵ nor can the company require other users of the way to provide special devices to insure it the opportunity to drive its cars at unlimited speed.⁹⁶ The rule that it is necessary to prove that certain appliances are in general use by street railroad companies before negligence can be predicated on the omission to supply them does not apply to appliances, the use of which is a matter of common knowledge.⁹⁷ The character of appliances in use at the time of the accident determines the liability of a street railroad company for failure to equip its cars with safety appliances, without regard to what is done subsequently in adding other appliances.⁹⁸ A company is not negligent in using a car which in passing around a curve extends beyond the line of the track.⁹⁹

Fenders. In the exercise of ordinary care and prudence a company operating a street railroad is required to use reasonable diligence in equipping its cars with fenders,¹ and it is negligence per se to operate a car without fenders required by statute² or ordinance;³ but the failure to equip a car with a fender is not, in the absence of an ordinance or statute requiring it, of itself negligence,⁴ and the want of a fender cannot be made the ground of liability against the company if its absence is not the proximate cause of the injury or did not contribute in any way to it, as discussed infra § 212. Where an ordinance requiring the use of fenders provides that they shall not be attached until the kind selected has been approved by the common council, the company is under no obligation to order fenders in advance of the approval,⁵ and, where the fenders have been selected but not approved, the absence of fenders from a car is not per se negligence.⁶ The fact that a fender at the rear of a car is not raised is not negligence if it is not customary to keep such fenders raised.⁷

Where steam power is used, as in the case of an elevated railroad, the company should use reasonable care to equip its engines with, and keep in repair, appliances to prevent sparks, cinders, or coals from escaping on to persons crossing under or near the road,⁸ and if it uses such care it is not liable for negligence from the mere fact that a cinder or coal does escape and causes injury.⁹

§ 197. Vigilance of Persons in Charge of Car

It is the duty of the operator of a streetcar to keep a lookout and a failure to keep a lookout of the kind and at the times required by law is negligence.

A motorman, driver, or gripman in charge of the operation of a streetcar is ordinarily bound to anticipate the presence of vehicles and pedestrians on the street or highway in front of or near his car,¹⁰ and it is his duty to keep a diligent lookout to avert injury to persons, animals, or vehicles on the track or approaching it.¹¹ More care has been

Duty to keep lookout:

For animals and vehicles see infra § 228.

Conductor

(1) Ordinarily a conductor of a streetcar is not required to keep a lookout to avoid accidents at crossings.—Gebhardt v. St. Louis Transit Co., 71 S.W. 448, 97 Mo.App. 373.

(2) If, however, a conductor sees a person exposed to danger, it is his duty to give a signal to stop the car and to take reasonable means to prevent the injury.—Indianapolis Trac-required of a motorman on a streetcar than of an engineer on a locomotive.¹² Accordingly, a motorman starting a car from a standstill has no right to assume that the track before his car is clear,¹³ but must look to see that the track immediately ahead is clear;¹⁴ and, where he is so circumstanced, either by the structure of the streetcar or by its location where it is stopped, that he cannot see whether the track ahead is clear and whether it is safe to proceed, ordinary or reasonable care requires that he make such an observation as will enable him to ascertain whether it is safe to proceed,¹⁵ or that he give an adequate and timely warning of his intention so to do, as discussed infra § 202.

Although the duty to keep a lookout is not confined to street crossings but is applicable to the entire line of the street,¹⁶ and although the fact that the use of the street by pedestrians and vehicles is frequent or infrequent is not material as far as the duty of keeping a lookout is concerned,¹⁷ the lookout must be maintained where the operator should or ought to know that people are likely to be,¹⁸ which duty is particularly applicable at street cross-

ings¹⁹ where a greater degree of watchfulness is required than at other places,²⁰ and on streets in densely populated neighborhoods or on crowded streets.²¹ On the other hand, there is no duty to keep a lookout along the company's tracks outside the limits of the street or highway,²² except at points where the company has reasonable grounds to anticipate the presence of persons on the tracks,²³ as at a point where, for a considerable length of time, pedestrians have been in the habit of walking along or crossing the company's private right of way.²⁴

More care is required on a dark and foggy day than in broad daylight,²⁵ and, where conditions are such that the motorman cannot, by keeping a constant lookout, discover the near approach of persons, he should use his sense of hearing to avoid collisions with, or injury to, them.²⁶ The company is not liable for failure of a motorman to keep a lookout unless the danger appeared soon enough to use means to avert it;²⁷ and it has been held that, where the motorman has failed to keep a lookout, the law does not charge him with seeing a person's danger whether or not he saw him, if he could have seen him by keeping a lookout.²⁸ In the absence of statutory provisions ordinary vigilance is all that is required.²⁹ This does not mean ordinary care to avoid injury after the danger is actually seen but to use such care and diligence in watching for and discovering the danger.³⁰ Since, when the car is moving, a motorman is required to keep a close lookout ahead, the nature of his duties prevents him from keeping a close watch in his rear,³¹ although under some circumstances the duty may arise for the motorman to look to the rear or side of the car to discover possible danger to another vehicle or to a pedestrian.³²

The failure of the person in charge of the operation of a streetcar to keep a lookout of the kind and at the times required by law is negligence,³³ rendering the streetcar company liable for the resulting damage if such negligence is the proximate cause of the injury, as discussed infra § 212.

Statutes or ordinances. Some statutes or ordinances have imposed on the motorman, driver, or gripman in charge of a street railroad the duty of maintaining a vigilant watch.³⁴ Such an ordinance requires the motorman to be prepared to stop his car at the first appearance of danger, within the shortest time and space possible,³⁵ and requires the car to be stopped only when it is perceived that a collision is imminent³⁶ and with due regard to the safety of passengers.³⁷ The duty is not conditioned on the negligence of a pedestrian who goes into a dangerous position, but on the appearance of danger, whether such danger is caused by the pedestrian's negligence or otherwise.³⁸ Ordinances of this character require a higher degree of care than is required under the common law,³⁹ and violation thereof ordinarily amounts to negligence per se,⁴⁰ but it has been held that noncompliance with such a requirement does not imply corporate negligence within the meaning of a statute imposing a penalty on a corporation operating a street railroad which by reason of its negligence causes the death of a person.⁴¹ A motorman who is looking backward, and talking to someone in the car, when the car is moving rapidly along a street where people are always likely to be crossing, is negligent under such an ordinance.⁴² A statute imposing a lookout duty

Humanitarian doctrine

(1) The "vigilant watch" ordinance of the City of St. Louis requires streetcar operator to act on first appearance of danger, and, thus, imposes on him higher duty than that required under humanitarian doctrine.

—Banks v. St. Louis Public Service Co., Mo.App., 249 S.W.2d 481.

(2) Motorman who observed oncoming automobile two hundred seventy to three hundred fifteen feet from car when it first entered upon track was required to stop when it first became apparent that automobile might continue to be driven on track in danger zone and while motorman had ample time and space to stop before collision.—Abernathy v. St. Louis Public Service Co., Mo., 240 S.W.2d 914.

Independent of vigilant watch ordinance common-law duty of lookout exists.—Melton v. St. Louis Public Service Co., Mo., 251 S.W.2d 663—Murray v. Kansas City Public Service Co., Mo., 61 S.W.2d 334.

on all persons running trains upon any railroad within the state has been held not to apply to street railroads.⁴³

Duty to keep window clear. The duty of the motorman to keep the window in front of him cleared from rain to enable him to keep a lookout is a question of reasonable care under the circumstances;⁴⁴ if the extent of his vision is thereby diminished it is his duty to remove the hindrance to his view before proceeding,⁴⁵ and the company cannot avail itself of its own negligence in failing to keep its windows in such condition that the motorman could see through them.⁴⁶

§ 198. Rate of Speed and Control of Car

reasonable rate of speed, and the operator must at all times so regulate the speed of the car as to have it under reasonable control.

A street railroad company must operate its cars at such a rate of speed as under all the circumstances is reasonable and compatible with the lawful and customary use of the street or highway by pedestrians and vehicles;⁴⁷ and this duty exists at common law although there are no state statutes or municipal ordinances applicable.⁴⁸ Accordingly, a motorman or driver must at all times so regulate the speed of his car as to have it under reasonable control,⁴⁹ so that it may be stopped before doing injury in any situation which is likely to arise under the circumstances,⁵⁰ or so as to be able to reduce the speed, and if necessary stop the car,

Limited use of streets

Where the pedestrian public makes but a limited use of street, the public interest is subordinated to the necessities of street railway operation to some extent and street railway may properly operate its cars at greater speed and with a lesser degree of care.—Peterson v. Minneapolis St. Ry. Co., Minn., 53 N.W.2d 817—Wosika v. St. Paul City Ry. Co., 83 N.W. 386, 80 Minn. 364.

Interurban cars

(1) In absence of statutory regulation, speed of interurban cars must be regulated to necessities of traffic conditions.—Carson v. Perkins, 29 N.E.2d 772, 217 Ind. 543.

(2) Interurban car operating in outlying district over private right of way may lawfully travel faster than streetcar in congested traffic.—Rosenberg v. Des Moines Ry. Co., 238 N.W. 703, 213 Iowa 152.

Private right of way

A streetcar company may operate its cars on a private right of way at whatever speed it wishes, provided it does not endanger passengers, and circumstances do not require the exercise of ordinary care as to speed, in order to protect persons who may be on the tracks.—Turney v. United Rys. Co. of St. Louis, 135 S.W. 93, 155 Mo.App. 513.

Degree of control

(1) Motorman has duty to have such control of car as to avoid dangers ordinarily incident to its operation and also such unusual and unexpected dangers as he may see in time to avoid.—Hinton v. Pittsburgh Rys. Co., 59 A.2d 151, 359 Pa. 381—Scholl v. Philadelphia Suburban Transp. Co., 51 A.2d 732, 356 Pa. 217—Hamley v. Pittsburgh Rys. Co., 28 A.2d 911, 345 Pa. 380—Cox v. Wilkes-Barre Ry. Co., 23 A.2d 57, 146 Pa.Super. 445.

(2) However, he is required only to have the car under such control as the circumstances seem to require.—Cox v. Wilkes-Barre Ry. Corp., supra—Schaeffer v. Reading Transit Co., 153 A. 323, 302 Pa. 220—Knobelich v. Pittsburgh, H., B. & N. C. Ry. Co., 109 A. 619, 266 Pa. 140—Schnitzer v. Philadelphia Transp. (3) Whether the adequate control required of operator of streetcar has been exercised in a given case depends on the attending circumstances and is a matter for independent determination in each case as it arises.—Perry v. Pittsburgh Rys. Co., 55 A.2d 354, 357 Pa. 608.

50. Pa.—Steffenson v. Lehigh Valley Transit Co., 64 A.2d 785, 361 Pa. 317—Perry v. Pittsburgh Rys. Co., 55 A.2d 354, 357 Pa. 608—Galliano

when danger is imminent,⁵¹ or so as to avoid danger which is, or in the exercise of ordinary care should be, known to him.⁵² This rule is particularly applicable when the car is approaching a street crossing,⁵³ where it is being run on a crowded or densely populated street,⁵⁴ where there is an obstruction from any cause to the motorman's sight of his track,⁵⁵ or where there is a sign over the tracks requiring cars to run slowly,⁵⁶ although the speed need not be so regulated as to avoid injury to persons using the street or highway in an unreasonable and improper manner.⁵⁷

The company is not obliged to run its cars at as low a rate of speed when passing private entryways⁵⁸ or have them under as immediate control midway of the block⁵⁹ as it is when approaching street crossings. More care as to speed is required of the motorman of a streetcar than of an engineer on a locomotive,⁶⁰ since the performance of his functions does not require high speeds over long distances without stops.⁶¹ Also, more care is required during the active business hours of the day than late at night.⁶² Greater care must be exercised in running a streetcar across the streets of a city than in crossing a highway in the country.⁶³ Streetcars may, however, maintain a fair rate of speed⁶⁴ or go fast;⁶⁵ and, in the absence of an express regulation limiting the rate of their speed, the mere fact that a car is running at a rapid rate does not establish that it is being run in a negligent manner or constitute negligence per se,⁶⁶ although a high rate of speed is some evidence of negligence⁶⁷ and although it may be negligence as a matter of fact.⁶⁸

Circumstances showing or tending to show negligence. What rate of speed is reasonable and, conversely, what rate of speed is unreasonable and negligent are determined by the relation of the speed to the circumstances under which it is maintained, hav-

Under control

To have a streetcar "under control" means having it under such control that it can be stopped before doing injury to any person in any situation which is reasonably likely to arise under the circumstances.—Galliano v. East Penn Electric Co., 154 A. 805, 807, 303 Pa. 498—60 C.J. p 385 note 56 [a].

ing regard to all circumstances and conditions existing at the time, which may increase the danger of persons being on or near the track.⁶⁹ It is ordinarily negligence to run a car at an unusual and excessive rate of speed over a street crossing⁷⁰ or along a crowded or much used street crossing⁷¹ even though such speed is not in excess of the limit of speed fixed by ordinance or statute,⁷² if, under the circumstances, it is a dangerous rate;⁷³ the mere fact that the company is prohibited by statute or ordinance from running at a greater than a given rate of speed is not a license for it to run at that rate of speed under all circumstances.⁷⁴ So it has been held negligence to run at a high rate of speed under adverse light or atmospheric conditions,⁷⁵ without lights,⁷⁶ or without giving proper warning,⁷⁷ or to accelerate speed suddenly without warning⁷⁸ or when indicating an intention to stop.⁷⁹ The fact that a streetcar was running at an excessive speed at the time of the accident does not of itself show that that was the cause of the accident.⁸⁰

Failure to provide sand to prevent skidding is not negligence where experience has shown it ineffective for the purpose.⁸¹

§ 199. — Reducing Speed and Stopping Car

A motorman or driver has the duty, when danger is imminent, to reduce the speed of or to stop his car, if necessary, in time to avoid an accident.

A motorman or driver has the duty when danger is imminent to reduce the speed of or to stop his car, if necessary, in time to avoid an accident;⁸² and it has been held to be his duty to slacken speed as he approaches a street crossing;⁸³ but, where no danger is apparent, in the absence of statute or ordinance to that effect, he is not required to stop his car at such place for the purpose of looking and listening,⁸⁴ and it is not his duty to keep such control of his car as to be able to bring it to a full stop before striking one in the act of crossing the track without regard to the suddenness with which he came upon the track.⁸⁵ Generally, it is not negligence per se to fail to stop a streetcar on signal at a corner⁸⁶ or to fail to stop a car operated on a private right of way, although the motorman saw plaintiff standing at a safe distance from the track.⁸⁷

§ 200. — Statutory or Municipal Regulation

The operator of a streetcar has the duty to keep within the rate of speed fixed by statutory or municipal regulations, and a violation of such regulations may constitute negligence per se or evidence of negligence.

It is the duty of a streetcar motorman to keep the speed of the car within the rate fixed by statute or ordinance.⁸⁸ There is an irreconcilable conflict in the decisions as to the effect of the violation by a street railway company, in the operation of its cars, of regulatory ordinances designed to promote the public safety.⁸⁹ In some jurisdictions it is negligence per se to run a streetcar at a rate of speed prohibited by statute or ordinance where an accident is caused thereby.⁹⁰ In others, the mere fact that a car is driven at a rate of speed forbidden by city ordinance is not considered proof of negligence as a matter of law,⁹¹ some holding it is but an evidential fact tending to prove negligence,⁹² others that it is not even evidence of negligence toward the injured person.⁹³ The mere fact that a car is running at a prohibited rate of speed does not of itself entitle a person to recover for injuries received in an accident therewith, although it may be the foundation of a recovery if he receives injuries by reason of such excessive speed.⁹⁴ Where the regulation does not fix a uniform rate of speed applicable at all times and places, running at a speed in excess of that stipulated is not necessarily negligence.⁹⁵ An ordinance requiring the motorman to have his car under control when approaching an intersecting street applies to cars running on a space reserved for them.⁹⁶

Failure to stop before going over a steam railroad crossing, in violation of a statute or ordinance, is not, it has been held, negligence without regard to the circumstances attending such failure.⁹⁷ An ordinance requiring persons "riding or driving" to check up or halt for pedestrians, if necessary, on approaching alley or street crossings does not apply to streetcars.⁹⁸

§ 201. — Rules of Company

The rate of speed and control of streetcars may be fixed and limited by company operating rules, but the violation of a company rule regulating speed is not negligence per se.

The rate of speed and control of streetcars may be fixed and limited by company operating rules,⁹⁹ and an interurban traction company using the tracks

Regulation as to speed and movement of cars generally see supra § 168.

Speed and control at intersections

(1) Ordinance providing that control and speed of streetcars at intersections must be reasonable and proper under circumstances, apart from provision fixing fifteen-mile speed limit in congested or business areas does not create any preëminent right in favor of either streetcar or vehicle colliding with it, or fix a speed limit.—Crawford v. Baltimore Transit Co., 58 A.2d 680, 190 Md. 381.

(2) Portion of city ordinance providing that control and speed of streetcars must be reasonable and proper at street intersections was applicable in action against street railway company for death of pedestrian struck by streetcar at intersection, regardless of whether accident occurred in thickly congested or business part of city so as to invoke ordinance provision limiting speed to fifteen miles per hour.—Baltimore Transit Co. v. State for Use of Castanda, 71 A.2d 442, 194 Md. 421.

Settled residential district

An ordinance limiting the speed of streetcars in business or settled residential districts does not require that the district be densely settled, but is satisfied by the presence in the vicinity of a suburban business center and occasional residences. The ordinance does not say "densely settled" but "settled."—Sundstrom v. Puget Sound Tract, etc., Co., 156 P. 828, 90 Wash. 640.

Purpose

A rule requiring motormen to have their cars under control a certain distance before reaching a stopping place is intended to prevent colli-

of a city street railway is bound by the rules of the latter company regulating the speed of cars at crossings.¹ The violation of a company rule regulating speed by the operator is not negligence per se,² but is a circumstance to be considered in determining whether or not the operator was negligent.³

§ 202. Signals or Warnings

It is the duty of the employees in charge of a streetcar to give a proper signal or warning on the approach of the car to a place where, under the circumstances, there is danger of a collision with persons or vehicles.

As a part of their duty to exercise ordinary care to avoid injury, it is the duty of the employees in charge of a streetcar to give a proper signal or warning, as by sounding a bell or gong, or otherwise, on the approach of the car to a place where under the circumstances there is danger of a collision with persons or vehicles,⁴ such as on its approach to a street crossing.⁵ This duty to give a timely warning exists, although there is no statute or ordinance requiring it,⁶ but it arises only when an ordinarily prudent person would give such warning under similar circumstances.⁷ The greater the speed of the car the greater the degree of care required in giving warning when approaching a crossing,⁸ and the fact that an emergency exists does not excuse the motorman from performing this duty where the emergency is created by his negligence.⁹ With respect to an open and obvious danger, the motorman is under no duty to warn an adult person who is apparently able to see, hear, and move.¹⁰ Ordinary care may require that other means be taken to prevent accidents,¹¹ such as that the company have a flagman stationed at a particular crossing,¹² and it is liable for his negligence,¹³ but negligence of such a flagman is not "negligence in operating the cars" within the meaning of a statute fixing the penalty therefor.¹⁴

Failure to give reasonably audible warning of the approach of the car is not necessarily negligence¹⁵ and in the absence of an ordinance requiring the giving of signals, a failure to do so is not negligence per se,¹⁶ although it is evidence of negligence,¹⁷ and may be negligence under the cir-

sion with travelers at crossings and not to give more time for would-be passengers to cross the tracks in front of a car.—Wolf v. New Orleans Ry. & Light Co., supra.

cumstances of the case.¹⁸ Where the duty to sound a signal bell is fixed by statute, it has been held that noncompliance therewith may be considered in determining the motorman's negligence, although it is not controlling,¹⁹ but, in order that the violation of such regulation may be relevant on the question of negligence, it is necessary that the duty created thereby should have been for the benefit of, or should have been owed to, the person claiming to have been injured through the violation.²⁰

On its private right of way a streetcar company may operate its cars without sounding a gong or signal of approach, unless special circumstances require it.²¹

§ 203. Lights

A streetcar, in the nighttime or when it is dark, should be provided with lights sufficient to enable the operator in the exercise of ordinary care to see far enough ahead to avoid a collision, or sufficient to warn travelers of the approach of the car, and the failure to comply with such duty may constitute negligence.

Streetcars running in the nighttime or when it is dark should be provided with sufficient lights,²² and with such lights as will enable the motorman or driver in the exercise of ordinary care to see far enough ahead to avoid a collision with a person or vehicle on the track,²³ or such as will be sufficient to warn travelers of the approach of the car and put them on their guard,²⁴ particularly where such lights are required by statute or ordinance.²⁵

Where the lights in use are the ones prescribed by statute or ordinance, they are sufficient,²⁶ but the company is not bound to provide a particular kind of light, if the one in use is as good or better.²⁷ In the absence of statute or ordinance, the company discharges its duty where the streetcar carries a headlight of efficiency equivalent to those used on similar cars,²⁸ and, since streetcars usually operate where there are brilliant electric lights, they are not required to carry headlights such as are properly required of automobiles.²⁹

Where ordinary prudence requires that a streetcar have a headlight, the failure to provide such a light is negligence³⁰ and the company is liable for any injury proximately resulting from the negligent operation of its car through the dark without a headlight, as discussed infra § 212. The absence of lights by reason of the trolley pole leaving the wire is of itself, however, insufficient to show negligence,³¹ and turning on headlights is not negligence even if it is the proximate cause of the collision.³² So the mere fact that the injured person was momentarily blinded by the glare of the lights or confused by the lights is not sufficient to establish negligence on the part of the company,³³ and the additional fact that previous to the accident a circular letter of the board of railroad commissions to the company had advised dimming the lights does not make it so.³⁴ company operating rule as to lights does not render a violation of such rule by the operator negligence per se,³⁵ it is evidence of negligence.³⁶

§ 204. Employing Conductor

In the absence of a statute or ordinance to the contrary, a streetcar may be run without a conductor, and the failure to provide a car with a conductor is not of itself negligence.

Although it is usual to have a motorman and conductor on a train consisting of a car and trailer carrying passengers,³⁷ in the absence of statute or ordinance providing otherwise a streetcar may be run without a conductor,³⁸ and the failure of a street railroad company to provide a car with a conductor is not of itself such negligence as will render the company liable for injuries caused by such car,³⁹ unless the absence of a conductor causes the motorman so to neglect his duties as motorman, in order to perform the duties of conductor, that the injury is thereby caused.⁴⁰ The failure to keep a conductor on a car, as required by ordinance, does not of itself render the company liable for injuries received by a child who jumped on the rear end of the car in play, and fell therefrom.⁴¹

§ 205. Frightening Animals

A street railroad company is not liable for injuries to animals resulting from their fright, unless the company was negligent in doing the thing which caused the fright.

As a street railroad company generally is entitled to the use of the street on which its tracks are laid, for the operation of its cars, equally with riders and drivers of horses, as discussed infra § 207, the company is not liable for injuries caused by horses on or near its tracks becoming frightened at the ordinary appearances and movements of cars under prudent and careful management,⁴² or at the usual and necessary noises incident to the operation of cars,⁴³ and a driver going into the presence of cars takes the ordinary risk of being able to control his horses when they are frightened by the ordinary movements and noises of cars.⁴⁴ At the same time, however, streetcars must be so operated as not unduly to interfere with the rights of individuals using the street or highway by other modes of travel;⁴⁵ and it is the duty of the operator of a car to exercise reasonable and ordinary care under the circumstances to avoid the danger of frightening horses,⁴⁶ and, hence, the company may be liable if the fright of a horse or team is caused by the negligent making of unusual and unnecessary noises⁴⁷ or appearances⁴⁸ in the operation of its cars.

Sounding of gong or signal. The mere sounding of a gong or other ordinary signal by a streetcar motorman or driver in the performance of his duty, near a horse, whereby it becomes frightened and causes injury, is ordinarily not negligence;⁴⁹ but, where the driver or motorman sees or by the exercise of ordinary care could see that a horse is frightened, or likely to become frightened and unmanageable, it is his duty to cease sounding the gong or other signal,⁵⁰ and, if he continues to do so, thereby increasing the fright of the horse, it is negligence for which the company is liable,⁵¹ particularly where the sounding is done in a violent and unnecessary manner,⁵² or so recklessly or wantonly as to indicate a disregard of the safety of the horse's driver in the street.⁵³ If the gong is sounded after either the conductor or motorman discovers that the horse is being frightened thereby, the company may be liable, without regard to whether the gong is sounded by the one who made the discovery.⁵⁴

Failure to comply with city ordinance requiring a license for obstructions of the street is evidence of negligence in a suit by a person whose horse was frightened by such an unlicensed obstruction by a street railroad company.⁵⁵

§ 206. — Duty after Animal Frightened

The operators of streetcars, after discovering that an animal is frightened, have a duty to use ordinary care to avoid injury, and a failure to perform such duty may render the company liable for injuries resulting therefrom.

Where the servants of a street railroad company in charge of the operation of one of its cars see that a horse or team is frightened, it is their duty to use ordinary care to avoid injury,⁵⁶ but no greater degree of care than ordinary care is required,⁵⁷ and in fulfilling this obligation they must be governed by all the surroundings and circumstances of the case.⁵⁸ Thus, where the driver or motorman operating a car sees, or by the exercise of due diligence could see, that a horse or team is frightened at the car or its noises and is becoming unmanageable, it is his duty to use all reasonable efforts to diminish the fright of the horse,⁵⁹ and to prevent an accident,⁶⁰ and, if he fails to do so, he is guilty of negligence rendering the company liable for injuries resulting therefrom.⁶¹ Accordingly, under such circumstances, it is the motorman's duty to reduce the speed of the car⁶² and bring it under such control that it can be stopped if necessary to prevent a collision or injury,⁶³ and to use all reasonable efforts to stop the car where this is necessary;⁶⁴ and, if a man of ordinary prudence and carefulness would have brought the car under control⁶⁵ or stopped it before the accident happened,⁶⁶ the failure to do so is an act of negligence rendering the company liable.

A motorman is not, however, required to check the speed of his car every time he is notified of a skittish horse on the street;⁶⁷ and, if he is operating his car in a prudent and careful manner and there is nothing to indicate that the horse or team is frightened or becoming unmanageable and that there is imminent peril, his failure to reduce speed or stop his car does not render the company liable for the resulting damages,⁶⁸ unless his conduct under the circumstances can be attributed only to a wanton or reckless disregard of the consequences.⁶⁹ The failure of a motorman to see the frightened condition of a horse, when he may see it by the exercise of reasonable care, is negligence;⁷⁰ but it has been held that the law does not imply that the driver of a horse is in peril because the horse is frightened by a streetcar,⁷¹ and, in the absence of manifestations other than mere fright, the fair presumption is that the driver will be able to control the horse.⁷²

§ 207. Reciprocal Rights and Duties of Company and Travelers on Street

The reciprocal rights and duties of a street railroad company and travelers on the street between street crossings is discussed infra § 208, at street crossings, infra § 209 and under statutory provisions or ordinances, infra § 210. The rights and duties of the street railroad company with respect to collision with vehicles on the street having special privileges, such as ambulances, fire apparatus, and police vehicles are considered infra §§ 241-243.

Examine Pocket Parts for later cases.

§ 208. — Between Street Crossings

Subject to the qualification that a street railroad company may be said to have a paramount or superior right of way over its tracks between street crossings whenever its right conflicts with the right of a traveler on the street, the rights and duties of the company and of the traveler to use that part of the street occupied by the street railroad tracks are equal and reciprocal.

A street railroad company has no exclusive right to the use of that part of a public street or highway occupied by its tracks,⁷³ but, except where the street is so obstructed that a driver would have to stop or drive on the tracks,⁷⁴ in view of the fact that its cars run on a fixed track, and of the fact that they are run for the convenience and accommodation of the public, the company may be said to have a paramount or superior right of way over its tracks between street crossings, whenever its right conflicts with the right of a traveler on the street, whether a pedestrian, equestrian, or driver of a vehicle, to the extent that such traveler must reasonably give way to an approaching or passing car.⁷⁵ Subject to this qualification, the rights of the company and of the traveler on the street to use that part of the street occupied by the street railroad tracks are equal and reciprocal,⁷⁶ a traveler on the street having as much right, if in the exercise of due care, to go across or along such part of the street, when not occupied by cars, as across or along any other part of the street;⁷⁷ and the right of each as a traveler ends where that of the other begins.⁷⁸

In the exercise of their reciprocal rights the company and a traveler on the street are also under reciprocal duties, to the extent that the rights of each must be exercised with due regard to the rights of the other, and in such a careful and reasonable manner as not unreasonably to abridge or interfere with those rights,⁷⁹ and so as to avoid injury, the one to avoid inflicting injury, the other to avoid being injured,⁸⁰ proper consideration being given to the difference in motive power, and to the fact that the cars must run on a fixed track and rapidly acquire a greater momentum than another vehicle.⁸¹ Thus on the one hand it is the duty of the company to exercise reasonable care and diligence to keep a lookout for persons and vehicles on or near the track, as discussed generally supra § 197, warn them of the approach of the car, as considered generally supra § 202, and give them a reasonable opportunity to get off or keep off the track;⁸² and the fact that the right of way over its tracks is expressly given to the company by a statute or ordinance does not relieve it from exercising ordinary care to avoid colliding with a person, animal, or vehicle on the track, as discussed infra § 210. The duty of a motorman is to operate his own streetcar in a proper way so as not to cause injury to others having the same right to use the street as the street railroad company.⁸³ He has no duty to protect pedestrians against injury from other streetcars on parallel tracks,⁸⁴ and the company could not confer such authority and responsibility on its motormen.⁸⁵ Although as high a degree is required,⁸⁶ the law does not require a higher degree of care of a motorman than is required of other users of the streets,⁸⁷ subject only to the modifications that the path of the car is fixed, while travelers, either on foot or in vehicles, may use the entire way, as far as it has been fitted and opened for public travel.⁸⁸ On the other hand, it is the duty of a traveler on or near the track when a car approaches to exercise reasonable care and diligence to get off or keep off the track until it passes,⁸⁹ so as not unreasonably to impede or interfere with its progress,⁹⁰ and so as not to be injured thereby,⁹¹ but he need not be constantly watching for the approach of a car from behind,⁹²

Permissive crossing

(1) A "permissive crossing" is a defined foot path leading to, and crossing over, tracks of street railroad, which is being habitually used, and places on company a duty of care comparable to that required at regular crossing.—Hamley v. George, 76 A.2d 181, 183, 365 Pa. 543.

Bridge

Where the area occupied by a single track for streetcars crossing on one side of a bridge was a part of the highway, a truck driver crossing bridge with tracks on his right was entitled to use such area.—White v. Eastern Massachusetts St. Ry. Co., 12 N.E.2d 75, 299 Mass. 70.

(1) Although an interurban car is given precedence or right of way at crossing, a car which is not an interurban car but a streetcar does not have precedence or right of way at a street intersection.—Dunham v. Des Moines Ry. Co., 35 N.W.2d 578, 240 Iowa 421.

(2) Other decisions, however, have held that a streetcar has precedence or right of way at crossing generally without distinguishing between a streetcar and an interurban car.—Moss v. Mason City & C. L. R. Co., 251 N.W. 627, 217 Iowa 354—60 C.J. p 402 note 19 [a].

Right to pass over crossing

Travelers on the street and operators of streetcars both have the lawful right to pass over a crossing of an intersecting street.—Bidwell v. Los Angeles & S. D. B. Ry. Co., 148 P. 197, 169 Cal. 780.

Pedestrian had right to cross streetcar track at intersection.—McBride v. Middlesex & B. St. Ry. Co., 176 N.E. 185, 276 Mass. 29.

Boy on skates

In a broad and general sense a boy on roller skates has the rights and obligations of a pedestrian, with respect to right to recover for injuries sustained when struck by trolley car.—Dunlop v. Public Service Coordinated Transport, 4 A.2d 683, 122 N.J.Law 226.

a crossing, when a car is operated reasonably,⁹⁹ it has the right of way over a traveler with vehicle or otherwise wishing to cross the track at that point if it appears that diminution of speed would be necessary to permit such traveler to cross with safety;¹ but this does not mean that one about to cross car tracks at an intersection must always yield the right of way to an approaching car.²

The rights of each must be exercised with due regard to the rights of the other, and in a reasonable and careful manner, so as not unreasonably to abridge or interfere with the rights of the other,³ and so as to avoid inflicting or receiving injury.⁴ What each must do in the exercise of ordinary care depends on the facts of the particular case,⁵ but generally each is under the duty to operate at a reasonable rate of speed⁶ and to give timely warning of approach,⁷ and, ordinarily, as between the company and another having equal rights, the one who can most readily adjust himself to the exigencies of the situation must do so when necessary to avoid injury.⁸ Each may assume that the other will exercise due care⁹ and discharge his proper duty,¹⁰ and the motorman need not assume that a traveler on the street will fail to give way to a car approaching the crossing at the same time,¹¹ but neither can assume that the other will keep out of the way at his peril.¹²

The driver of a vehicle has the right of way at the crossing if, proceeding at a rate of speed which, under the circumstances of the time and locality, is reasonable, he reaches the point of crossing in time safely to go on the tracks in advance of an approaching car, the latter being sufficiently distant to be checked, and, if need be, stopped before it reaches him,¹³ and he may have an absolute right of way where the circumstances are such as to constitute an invitation by the company to cross.¹⁴ On the other hand, it has been held that, if a street-car going at a reasonable rate of speed will reach the crossing first, it has the right of way;¹⁵ and so, where one half of the length of a streetcar has passed the point of collision with a wagon in the street, it has so occupied the street that it is entitled to preference in passage.¹⁶ Priority in time in reaching a street intersection does not, however, give absolute priority of right, but is only one of the elements to be considered in determining the care exercised by a street motorman in proceeding.¹⁷ In the absence of a governing statute or ordinance, a streetcar is not required to stop at a street intersection for a funeral procession to pass or to give it the right of way.¹⁸

Intersection not used as crossing. Where a vehicle is proceeding along the same street as a car, and there is a mere attempt to cross to the other side, at the intersection instead of at some other point, the rule that at an intersection of streets the rights of a streetcar and of a crossing vehicle are equal has no application;¹⁹ but in such case the care required of the driver of the vehicle is the same as though there were no intersection.²⁰

Driver's motive in attempting to cross a streetcar track at a street intersection is immaterial where his rights are equal to those of the company.²¹

Interurban railroads. The legal status and reciprocal duties of an interurban street railroad company and a traveler at a public or private crossing are different from those prevailing in a city.²² In such a case the rights of the traveler ordinarily are subordinate to those of the company, in that the company is accorded the right of way or priority of passage over the crossing,²³ and, subject to such qualification, the rights and duties of the parties, even at a private crossing, are equal and reciprocal.²⁴

§ 210. — Under Statutory Provisions or Ordinances

Statutes and ordinances may fix the rights and duties of street railroad companies and others in the use of the streets between street crossings, and may supplant the common-law rule as to the rights and duties of the parties at street intersections.

Although a police regulation providing that streetcars shall have the right of way on their tracks amounts to nothing more than a declaration of a generally recognized rule of law,²⁵ statutes and ordinances may fix the rights and duties of street railroad companies and others in the use of the streets between street crossings,²⁶ and statutes and ordinances, fixing the reciprocal rights and duties of street railroad companies and others in the use of the streets, may supplant the common-law rule that the rights of the parties at street intersections are equal,²⁷ and give a right of way to the street railroad at a crossing;²⁸ but they do not give the company the exclusive right to use the street²⁹ or an absolute right of way;³⁰ nor do they give car operators full license to proceed across intersections without regard to the approach of vehicles,³¹ or relieve them from using reasonable care to avoid accidents.³² Where a streetcar has the right of way under an ordinance, it is the duty of an automobile driver to yield if, when he starts across the tracks, the relative position of the two vehicles is such that a reasonably prudent man would have foreseen that a collision was likely to occur unless one or the other stopped.³³

Although it has been held that the law of the road does not apply to streetcars,³⁴ and their operators need not turn to either side in compliance with the law, although the cars are vehicles within the meaning thereof,³⁵ statutes or ordinances regulating the right of way at street intersections have been applied to streetcars,³⁶ except where there is a provision specifically or by the context excluding streetcars.³⁷ Hence, under traffic regulations, a pedestrian may have the right of way at an intersection, regular crossing, or crosswalk,³⁸ and a pedestrian crossing a roadway at any point other than at crosswalk at an intersection must yield the right of way to the streetcar,³⁹ although such privileges conferred by the right of way apply only to moving pedestrians or streetcars,⁴⁰ and a streetcar standing at an intersection has no right of way over other vehicles or pedestrians, and a pedestrian can have no right of way in the crossing over the standing streetcar.⁴¹

Furthermore, various traffic regulations have been applied in determining the right of way as between a streetcar company and a traveler on the street at an intersection or crossing,⁴² such as the relative position or direction of travel,⁴³ or first entry into the intersection,⁴⁴ or the traffic control

Stopping on crosswalk

Motorman had no right to stop streetcar on crosswalk so that car projected into intersection, and by so doing acquired no right to prevent use of crosswalk by pedestrians, and under such circumstances pedestrian would have had the right to remove the streetcar, if physically able to do so, or to pass over it.—Wright v. Minneapolis St. Ry. Co., supra.

42. Stopping behind streetcar

(1) Statute requiring vehicles to stop at least certain number of feet to rear of streetcar which has stopped to discharge or receive passengers is a right of way statute and applies to operation and control of streetcar approaching another streetcar stopped, or about to stop, for discharging or receiving passengers.—LeVasseur v. Minneapolis St. Ry. Co., 21 N.W.2d 522, 221 Minn. 205.

(2) Such statute creates a restricted right of way area to the rear of car and between car door and gates and nearest curb for benefit of pedestrians going to and from streetcar, and person alighting from streetcar loses his right of way on leaving such area.—LeVasseur v. Minneapolis St. Ry. Co., supra.

(3) Thus, person alighting from streetcar and in passing to the rear of the streetcar within the designated number of feet thereof had the right of way as to following streetcar, but on passing out of that area into path of a streetcar approaching from opposite direction plaintiff lost the right of way.—LeVasseur v. Minneapolis St. Ry. Co., supra.

Wash.—Milne v. City of Seattle, 145 P.2d 888, 20 Wash.2d 30.

60 C.J. p 405 note 56 [a].

Loss of right

Even though trolley bus approaching intersection from the right lost its right of way by proceeding at an unlawful speed, that fact did not shift the absolute right to automobile approaching from the left, and the maximum effect would be to make inapplicable to the situation the statute relating to right of way, and thereupon relative obligations of the drivers of the converging vehicles would be governed by common law.—Schaefer v. Cincinnati St. Ry. Co., 62 N.E.2d 102, 75 Ohio App. 288.

In Pennsylvania

(1) Under statute the vehicle or streetcar approaching on right has right of way.—Reinhard v. Lehigh Valley Transit Co., 6 A.2d 96, 334 Pa. 343—Schnitzer v. Philadelphia Transp. Co., 45 A.2d 419, 158 Pa.Super. 444, reversed on other grounds 47 A.2d 709, 354 Pa. 576.

(2) Prior to statutory amendment inserting streetcars in statute, statute was held not to apply to streetcars.—Feldman v. Philadelphia Rapid Transit Co., 163 A. 39, 106 Pa.Super. 494.

44. Minn.—Yien Tsiang v. Minneapolis St. Ry. Co., 4 N.W.2d 630, 213 Minn. 21.

of intersections,⁴⁵ and, except as it may be qualified by the right of way possessed by one over the other, each must exercise reasonable care.⁴⁶ Thus, a traffic regulation giving vehicles proceeding in a certain direction the right of way at intersections over vehicles approaching from other directions does not give a streetcar traveling in the preferred direction an absolute right to the exclusive use of the street as against vehicles traveling in other directions;⁴⁷ nor does it relieve the driver of an automobile who has such right of way of the duty of looking for an approaching car before crossing the track.⁴⁸

Special ordinance

The fact that truck driver entered intersection ahead of streetcar, giving him right of way at intersection under general traffic ordinance, did not authorize him to go upon the car track after seeing that streetcar had started across the intersection, in violation of special ordinance prohibiting crossing the tracks in front of approaching streetcars.—Havins v. Dallas Railway & Terminal Co., Tex. Civ.App., 130 S.W.2d 878, error refused.

Entry from same highway

Where a two-roadway boulevard was separated by parkway on which streetcar tracks were located, and truck entered the wrong traffic lane and at first intersection turned to cross the streetcar tracks in order to get into the proper traffic lane, and was struck by streetcar proceeding in same direction as truck, the statute requiring driver of vehicle approaching intersection to yield right of way to vehicle which has entered intersection from different highway was inapplicable because truck entered the intersection from the same highway and not from a different one.—O'Neill v. Minneapolis St. Ry. Co., 7 N.W.2d 665, 213 Minn. 514.

Stop signs

(1) Code providing that no driver of vehicle or operator of streetcar shall disobey instructions of official traffic control device impliedly requires streetcar operators, as well as other vehicle drivers, to stop at stop signs at entrances to through highways and other street intersections and yield right of way to vehicles approaching on intersecting highways, as provided by sections defining obedience to stop sign instructions by vehicle drivers, even though such sections are not in terms applicable to streetcars.—Fox v. Baltimore Transit Co., 71 A.2d 470, 194 Md. 403.

(2) As statutory duties of vehicle drivers and streetcar operators to stop at stop signs are correlated and coordinate, and purpose of duty to stop is to give force and practicability to duty to yield right of way, statutory amendments, striking words, "or operator of a street car," after words, "driver of a vehicle," in code sections requiring such drivers to stop at stop signs and yield right of way do not prevent resort to such sections to determine meaning of words, "obeying the instructions of a stop sign," in previous section providing that no driver of vehicle or operator of streetcar shall disobey such instructions.—Fox v. Baltimore Transit Co., supra.

Vehicles or pedestrians lawfully within intersection

(1) Under a statute providing that right of way shall be yielded to all vehicles and pedestrians lawfully within intersection at time traffic signal is given, operation of statute is not confined to giving right of way to those already in intersection when signal is given, but it applies to all lawfully within intersection.—Caryl, to Use of Merchants Mut. Casualty Co. v. Baltimore Transit Co., 58 A.2d 239, 190 Md. 162.

(2) Under such statute pedestrian crossing the street with traffic light in his favor has right of way over streetcar making turn into such street.—Caryl, to Use of Merchants Mut. Casualty Co. v. Baltimore Transit Co., supra.

(3) Furthermore, under such statute, pedestrian or operator of a vehicle, such as a streetcar operator, starting across an intersection with a favorable signal, has the right to

§ 211. Willful or Wanton Injury

Contributory negligence does not bar recovery for an injury caused by the willful, wanton, or reckless acts of the employees of a street railroad company in the course of their employment.

A person may recover for injuries received through the operation of a street railroad, notwithstanding negligence on his part, where the injuries are caused by reckless, willful, or wanton acts on the part of the servants of the company in the course of their employment.⁴⁹ In order to render the rule applicable, there must be conduct, under the tests prescribed in negligence cases generally, con-complete the trip, even if the traffic light changes in the middle of passage.—Eisenhower v. Baltimore Transit Co., 59 A.2d 313, 190 Md. 528.—Caryl, to Use of Merchants Mut. Cas. Co. v. Baltimore Transit Co., 58 A.2d 239, 190 Md. 162.

Equal rights

Pedestrian and streetcar proceeding across intersection with green traffic light have equal rights.—Keller v. N. C. Public Service, 138 So. 463, 18 La.App. 317.

Vehicles lawfully within intersection

Under act requiring vehicular traffic at intersections controlled by traffic signals to yield right of way to other vehicles lawfully within intersection when "Go" signal is exhibited, vehicle which entered intersection when light turned green before streetcar from opposite direction entered intersection to make a left turn had the right of way over streetcar.—*Indianapolis Rys. v. stituting willfulness, wantonness, or recklessness,⁵⁰ or "gross negligence," where this term is used synonymously in this connection.⁵¹

Rate of speed at which a streetcar is operated may have an important bearing in some,⁵² but is not necessarily conclusive in all,⁵³ cases on the question of willfulness, wantonness, or recklessness.

Failure to exercise reasonable care after discovery of peril. In connection with the last clear chance doctrine or the doctrine of discovered peril, discussed infra §§ 288-295, expressions, such as "willfulness," "wantonness," or "recklessness," are used where, after the motorman sees a person in peril on or near the track ahead, he fails to make reasonable efforts to avoid an accident,⁵⁴ such as to give warning of the approach of the car and to slacken the speed of, or stop, the car.⁵⁵

Contributory willful or wanton conduct. It has been held that no recovery can be had for an injury willfully and wantonly inflicted, where willful or wanton conduct for which the person injured is responsible contributed as a proximate cause of the injury.⁵⁶

§ 212. Proximate Cause of Injury

In order that the negligence of the street railroad company in the performance or omission of the duty owed to the person injured may impose liability, it is essential that the negligence of the company be the proximate cause of such injuries.

As in the case of injuries resulting from negligence generally, in order that the negligence of the street railroad company in the performance or omission of the duty owed to the person injured may impose liability, it is essential that the negligence of the company be the proximate cause of such injuries,⁵⁷ and thus, although the street railroad company is negligent, no liability attaches where there is no causal connection between the negligence and the injury.⁵⁸ General rules as to the elements and tests of proximate cause, and as to concurrent causes, have been applied in determining whether the negligence of the company was the proximate cause of the injury,⁵⁹ and, where the injury re-

Motorman's acts between intersections, approaching crossing, or at crossing, may constitute willfulness or wantonness.—Birmingham Elec. Co. v. Turner, supra—Schmidt v. Mobile Light & R. Co., 87 So. 181, 204 Ala. 694.

Failure to keep lookout

Motorman's failure to keep a proper lookout ahead would not constitute wantonness, unless it was also shown that motorman knew that place at which collision occurred was one where vehicles would probably be passing over the track.—Birmingham Elec. Co. v. Turner, 1 So.2d 299, 241 Ala. 66.

(2) In determining whether streetcar motorman's failure to see pedestrian who was struck while crossing street at a T intersection amounted to willful or wanton conduct, motorman's duty to exercise due care was not as great as in an ordinary crossing, and his failure to see did not amount to willful and wanton conduct.—Rajak v. In Missouri

(1) It has been stated that the failure of the motorman to exercise ordinary care to avoid the accident after discovery of the peril is sufficient to permit the humanitarian doctrine to be invoked, even if he does not act willfully, wantonly, or recklessly.—White v. St. Louis, etc., R. Co., 101 S.W. 14, 202 Mo. 539.

(2) However, it has been stated that liability in such case cannot have, nor has it, any other basis in logic except wantonness and recklessness, even though in the legal application of the rule the court has been compelled, for practical purposes of administering the law, to find and argue wanton and reckless disregard of life and limb from the facts of the case, when in truth the sentiments did not exist in the mind or intention of the actual tort-feasor.—State v. Ellison, Mo., 182 S.W. 961, 965.

(3) Thus, the rationale of cases imposing liability on the street railroad company under the humanitarian doctrine is found in the theory that the act of the company, in failing to exercise ordinary care after discovering the peril, is willful, wanton, and reckless.—State v. Ellison, supra.

sulted from an intervening efficient cause, the company is not liable.⁶⁰ Thus, no liability attaches to the company for injuries due to the inexperience and incompetency of its employees,⁶¹ or for any injury sustained due to failure of the company properly to equip its cars,⁶² or for any injuries received by trespassers,⁶³ or for injuries resulting from defects or obstructions in the operation of the railroad,⁶⁴ unless the negligence of the company is the proximate cause of the injury.

Collision with vehicles. In order that the negligence of a street railroad company may impose liability for injuries resulting from a collision of its car with a vehicle, it is essential that the negligence of the company constitute the proximate cause of such injuries.⁶⁵ General rules as to the elements and tests of proximate cause, and as to concurrent causes, are applicable.⁶⁶ Thus, where the negligence of the street railroad company and other persons proximately cause the injury, it is immaterial which was more negligent or whose negligence contributed more to the injury,⁶⁷ unless the negligence of the other person or persons was the sole cause of the injury.⁶⁸

Person on or near tracks. As in the case of injuries resulting from negligence generally, in order that the negligence of a street railroad company may impose liability for personal injuries sustained by persons on or near the tracks, it is essential that the negligence of the company be the proximate cause of such injuries,⁶⁹ and it is not sufficient that the conditions existing at the time of the accident were such that the negligence of the company might possibly be inferred to be the proximate cause of the injury sustained.⁷⁰ Where the negligence of the streetcar company alone was the proximate or immediate cause of a pedestrian's injuries, the company is liable notwithstanding the injured person was guilty of some negligence.⁷¹ General rules as to the elements and tests of proximate cause, and as to concurrent causes, have been applied,⁷² and, hence, where a person, through defects in a street

rendering it unsafe for travel, was thrown upon a streetcar track immediately in front of a car running at a dangerous and negligent rate of speed, and was thereby killed, the negligence of both the city and the street railway company can be deemed the proximate cause of the death.⁷³ Consideration of which is the remote and which the proximate cause of injuries to a person on or near street railroad tracks is unnecessary where the negligence of the company is responsible for causes which combine to cause the injury.⁷⁴

In accordance with the general rule, an intervening cause, rather than the negligent act or omission of the street railroad company, may be the proximate cause of injuries to one who is injured while on or near the track;⁷⁵ but the fact that a third person's negligence contributed toward the injury of a pedestrian on or near a street railway track will not relieve the company of liability proximately caused by its own negligence.⁷⁶

3. DEFECTS AND OBSTRUCTIONS

§ 213. In General

Generally a street railroad company is liable for injuries resulting to persons or animals rightfully using the street or highway, from the unsafe condition of such street or highway, caused by its failure to perform its duty in the construction and keeping in repair of its tracks and equipment.

Since, as a general rule, it is the duty of a street railroad company to exercise reasonable care so to construct and maintain its tracks and equipment in a public street or highway as to restore and keep the street or highway in a reasonably safe condition for travel by pedestrians and vehicles, as dis-

In action for injuries received when plaintiff tripped over guardrail at curve of street railroad track, defendant's acquiescence in subsidence of paving along outside of rail which did not exceed quarter of an inch in depth was held insufficient to establish negligence of defendant.—Wright v. Pittsburgh Rys. Co., 181 A. 476, 320 Pa. 40.

Bridge

If truck exceeding tonnage permitted broke street railroad bridge by unlawfully crossing without planking, railroad, unless having notice, would not be liable when another truck fell through bridge several minutes thereafter.—Bowers v. Kansas City Public Service Co., 41 S.W. 2d 810, 328 Mo. 770.

Discontinuance of service

In motorist's action to recover for injuries allegedly caused by deep ruts along streetcar tracks, liability of streetcar company which had been granted permission to discontinue streetcar service by public service commission depended on whether its duty with respect to tracks still existed.—Wells v. City of Jefferson, 132 S.W.2d 1006, 345 Mo. 239.

Effect of contract

Contract providing that payments of street railroad to city should be in satisfaction of all obligations and liability on part of railroad for paving and repairing of streets occupied by surface lines did not relieve railroad of liability for injuries sustained because of hole underneath rail, where hole resulted from defect in track structure, and burden of properly maintaining track structure rested on railroad.—Yoder v. City of Philadelphia, 173 A. 275, 315 Pa. 586.

Viaduct

(1) A pedestrian could recover from street railroad for injuries sustained in fall caused by ice and snow on steps from a viaduct, although responsibility of railroad arose from a contract with borough and not with pedestrian, where contract put primary duty of maintaining stairway on railroad.—Thompson v. Allegheny Valley St. Ry. Co., 194 A. 921, 328 Pa. 118.

(2) Under contract to keep in "good condition and repair" a viaduct, street railroad was liable for injuries which pedestrian sustained in falling because snow and ice had accumulated on stairs from viaduct, as against contention that quoted phrase only required railroad to prevent viaduct from falling into decay or dilapidation, the word "repair" having a more comprehensive meaning than "mending."—Thompson v. Allegheny Valley St. Ry. Co., supra.

Violation of ordinance

Violation by street railway company of ordinance as to paving of street was negligence per se.—Dallas Ry. & Terminal Co. v. Bankston, Tex.Civ. App., 33 S.W.2d 500, reversed on other grounds Com.App., 51 S.W.2d 304.

Extent of duty

Statute requiring streetcar company to keep in repair portion of streets "occupied by its tracks" used quoted phrase as meaning the rails and space between them over which cars passed and, hence, transit authority, as successor to streetcar company, was not liable for injuries sustained by pedestrian before creation of authority when he stumbled on raised portion of pavement between inner rails of inbound and outbound tracks and fell in such position that his hand was crushed under passing streetcar, in absence of showing that streetcar was negligently operated or that streetcar company was in any way responsible for condition of pavement.—Hawkes v. Metropolitan Transit Authority, 102 N.E.2d 409, 328 Mass. 140.

Release from duty

(1) Voluntary agreement of street railway company with a state park commission permitting certain work adjacent to the tracks did not relieve company of liability for failure to discharge statutory duty to keep street between tracks in repair.—Pace v. Brooklyn & Queens Transit street is in a dangerous condition, the company cannot avail itself of the fact that it is in the same condition as any other street of that kind,⁸⁶ or that it ordered paving materials from reputable manufacturers.⁸⁷ Under a statute requiring street railroad companies to keep in repair that portion of the pavement adjacent to their tracks, "under the supervision of the local authorities," and "whenever required by them to do so," the fact that the municipal authorities have not notified or requested the company to make repairs in a pavement does not relieve the company from liability for injuries caused by defects therein.⁸⁸

The company is required to exercise only reasonable care in this respect,⁸⁹ and if it uses such care in the construction and maintenance of its tracks or equipment, it is not liable for injuries caused thereby;⁹⁰ nor is it liable for injuries caused by defects in the street which are not due to its negligence and which it is under no duty to repair.⁹¹ The fact that no other accident has ever happened because of it does not give the company a vested right to maintain a dangerous obstruction in a public street.⁹² Where a street railroad passes over private property on an embankment, the company is under no obligation to persons who pass along such embankment without invitation to safeguard it by a fence or otherwise.⁹³

Basis of liability in absence of negligence. The liability of a street railroad company for failing to keep the street in repair does not result from the mere fact that the corporation has been vested with a franchise or license of using the public street,⁹⁴ but the liability to maintain the pavement as such, if it exists, must either be rested on some valid statute or ordinance imposing such a duty or must arise out of the obligations of a contract,⁹⁵ and, in the absence of such statute, ordinance, or contractual obligation, the company is not liable to a traveler who is injured as a result of a defect in the street when such defect is not occasioned by the negligence of the company.⁹⁶

(2) Although duty may be considered as suspended while municipality or other public authority is performing certain work, duty reattaches on completion of such work and company is liable for subsequent injury due to defect.—Pace v. Brooklyn & Queens Transit Corp., supra—McCarthy v. Brooklyn & Queens Transit Corp., 4 N.Y.S.2d 213, 254 App.Div. 757, affirmed 18 N.E.2d 686, 279 N.Y. 737.

Purpose and extent of statutory liability

(1) Statute imposing liability on a street railroad for loss or injury sustained because of the neglect of servants of street railroad in the use and maintenance of its tracks was enacted to relieve municipality from such liability.—Berlandi v. Union Freight R. Co., 16 N.E.2d 17, 301 Mass. 47.

(2) Such statute comprehends any loss or injury resulting from any defect in the management, use, or construction of tracks, and liability is substantially same as that imposed by common law on persons obstructing the public highway; but, although statute only affirms common law, conditions imposed by such statute in enforcing liability must be observed, and hence motorists who are injured because of defective track are bound to proceed under such statute.—*Berlandi v. Stairway from street

Fact that one of six screws holding a plate in place on tread of stair leading from street to trains became loose and protruded from the stair would not constitute a structural defect so as to impose liability on street railroad to person who allegedly tripped on screw and was injured.—De Renzis v. New York Rapid Transit Corp., 9 N.Y.S.2d 933, 256 App.Div. 367.

Bridle path

Since street railway company, responsible for maintenance of park bridle path crossed by streetcar tracks, is not held to same degree of accountability for upkeep of such path as those charged with upkeep of highways used by pedestrians or vehicles, a depression, five to six inches deep by nine to twelve inches wide, along edge of streetcar track across park bridle path, was not violation of statutory duty to keep portion of path two feet outside its tracks in repair, and, hence, did not render it liable for injuries to one riding horse when it stepped into depression and fell.—*Schwartz v. § 214. Obstructions in Street or Highway

A street railroad company is liable for injuries which result to persons or animals from obstructions which through its negligence in constructing, maintaining, and operating its tracks and equipment it has caused or permitted to remain in the street or highway.

A street railroad company is liable for injuries which result to persons and animals from obstructions which through its negligence in constructing, maintaining, and operating its tracks and equipment it has caused or permitted to remain in the street or highway.⁹⁷ The company has, however, a lawful right to obstruct the street temporarily for the purpose of making necessary repairs,⁹⁸ and no recovery can be had against it where the only negligence alleged is in so obstructing the highway and sidewalks.⁹⁹ So, where the city has erected barriers indicating withdrawal of the street from public travel pending repairs therein, the company is not bound to anticipate the presence of pedestrians there,¹ or that they will stumble and fall in front of a car.² In removing from its tracks an obstruction wrongfully placed there, the company is not required to place it where it will not be dangerous to travelers upon the street or highway, and if it merely shifts it from its tracks to another part of the street, without otherwise increasing the danger to travelers, it is not liable for injuries caused thereby.³

Safety zone posts. Where safety zone posts are erected by the street railroad company in the street, pursuant to an agreement with the public authorities and for the primary purpose of protecting pedestrians using the street, such posts, if properly constructed, do not constitute a dangerous obstruction so as to render the company liable to a motorist striking such a post.⁴

§ 215. — Excavations in Street

A street railroad company is liable for resulting injuries where it leaves, without proper safeguards, an excavation which it has made in the street, or which it is under a duty to guard or repair.

A street railroad company is liable for resulting injuries where it leaves, without proper safeguards, an excavation which it has made in the street,⁵ or which it is under the duty to guard⁶ or repair;⁷ and although the company is not required to guard a trench dug across the tracks by the city, or to remove and replace barriers across its track to enable the cars to pass, if its servants remove a barrier placed by the city, no one being there under the duty to replace it, and then fail to replace it, the company is liable for resulting injuries.⁸ The company is not, however, liable for excavations not made by it and which it is under no duty to repair.⁹ An ordinance requiring excavations in streets to be marked at night by red lanterns does not apply to an open space between crossties of a street railroad at a point on neutral ground not maintained as a way for pedestrians,¹⁰ nor does an act requiring railroads to fill all angles in frogs and crossties.¹¹

A street railroad company is liable for injuries caused by its negligence in permitting its track or a part thereof to protrude above the surface of the street.

When a street railway company adopts such a construction of its roadbed, rails, or switches as will normally cause an excessive wear on adjoining parts of the highway, it is under a duty of reasonable care to guard against such excessive wear creating a dangerous condition in the highway,¹² and if such care is not used, and an accident results, which might reasonably have been anticipated, the company is prima facie liable therefor.¹³ So it is liable for injuries caused by its negligence in permitting its track or a part thereof to protrude above the surface of the street,¹⁴ and this liability exists where such obstruction is permitted between intersections as well as at intersections.¹⁵ The company cannot escape liability by showing that the obstruction was caused by the wearing away or natural sinking of the street from the rails,¹⁶ or the rising of the track above the pavement,¹⁷ or that the obstruction does not practically withdraw the thoroughfare from public use.¹⁸ A small elevation of the track above the surface of the street does not of itself constitute negligence;¹⁹ and, it has been held, the company is not liable for injuries resulting from the negligence of a contractor with the city who left the tracks projecting above the street level when he abandoned paving work,²⁰ or for an accident caused by the unevenness of the surface of the street, where it has worn away below the established grade.²¹

§ 217. — Trolley Wire

A street railroad company is liable for negligence in the maintenance of its trolley wire which results in injury to persons reasonably using the street.

A street railroad company must exercise reasonable care and diligence so to construct and maintain its trolley wire as to make it reasonably safe for the passage of persons who have a right to pass under it,²² as by properly guarding it from coming in contact with other wires,²³ and the company is liable for negligence in the maintenance of its wire which results in injury to persons reasonably using the street.²⁴ It is not, however, liable for the sagging of its trolley wire in a street from the effect of an unusual storm unless it fails to repair it within a reasonable time,²⁵ and it has been held that the company owes no duty to make the wire safe for persons who, for their own convenience or pleasure, pass under it by other than the usual methods of travel or business.²⁶

§ 218. — Trolley Wire Poles

Generally, a street railroad company is liable for an injury resulting from its erection and maintenance of a trolley wire pole in such a manner as to make the street dangerous for public travel.

The liability of a street railroad company for an injury due to the location of a trolley wire pole constituting an obstruction in the street is largely determined by the right of choice or selection of the location by the company,²⁷ although a conflict of authority exists as to the effect of official command or approval as to the location, as discussed infra § 223. However, in the absence of official command or approval, the company must place its poles with due regard for the public safety, and if it fails to exercise such care,²⁸ and the injured person was without fault,²⁹ the company is liable for an injury resulting from its erection and maintenance of a trolley wire pole at a point and in such a manner as to make the street dangerous for public travel.³⁰ Furthermore, the fact that a municipality produces a situation which makes the location of the pole hazardous and is negligent in not guarding the pole will not relieve the company, having knowledge of such hazard, of its duty to the traveling public,³¹ and, if the company fails to take the required protective action, it is liable for the injury resulting.³² The company is not, however, negligent in maintaining a pole outside of the curb on property owned by another quasi-public corporation for its business where the latter refused permission to remove the pole or make any physical change of the surface of the ground and it was necessary to maintain a pole near where it was.³³

Although a street railroad company is liable for the resulting injury where it is negligent, it is not a negligent obstruction for a company to allow its cars to stand on its tracks for a reasonable length of time.

Although a street railroad company is liable for the resulting injury where it is negligent in allowing a car to stand in the street,³⁴ it is not a negligent obstruction for a street railroad company to allow its cars to stand on its tracks for a reasonable length of time,³⁵ such as on a spur track or switch for the purpose of allowing another car to pass,³⁶ unless it is in violation of a statute or ordinance.³⁷

§ 220. — Lubricant on Track

A street railroad company is negligent when a lubricant is placed on its rails or the street in such quantities as to make the street not reasonably safe for travel.

Where a street railroad company applies a lubricant to its tracks along a public street so that its cars may pass around a curve more easily, it must apply it so as not to endanger persons using the street,³⁸ but the company is negligent therein only when the lubricant is placed on the rails or the street in such quantities as to make the street not reasonably safe for traffic.³⁹

§ 221. — Snow Piled in Street

A street railroad company, which violates its duty of exercising reasonable care in the removal of ice or snow by depositing and leaving the ice and snow in needless and dangerous obstructions on the street, is liable for injuries caused thereby to persons or animals.

A street railroad company has a right to remove ice and snow from its tracks so as to enable it to exercise its franchise;⁴⁰ but in doing so, it is its duty to exercise reasonable care so to dispose of or distribute the removed ice and snow as not unreasonably to interfere with the use of the street by pedestrians and vehicles,⁴¹ and this duty is sometimes expressly regulated by statute or ordinance.⁴² Except in so far as prohibited by statute or ordinance,⁴³ the company may use a snowplow, electric sweeper, rotary brushes, or other similar apparatus for the purpose of removing the ice and snow,⁴⁴ and, having removed the snow, it is entitled to have the tracks left free thereof.⁴⁵ If the company violates this duty, by depositing and leaving the ice and snow in needless and dangerous obstructions on the streets, it is liable for injuries caused thereby to persons or animals,⁴⁶ or to adjacent property as by flowage,⁴⁷ and an injunction lies, at the suit of an abutting house owner, to enjoin a street railroad company from leaving snow which it removes from its tracks heaped up between them and plaintiff's premises for a period longer than is reason-

§ 222. Notice of Defect or Obstruction

Generally, a street railroad company is not liable for an injury caused by a defect or obstruction except where it has neglected some duty in that respect after it has had notice of the defect or obstruction.

As a general rule, it is the duty of a street railroad company to make an exact and continuous inspection of its tracks and equipment,⁵³ and it is liable for injuries resulting therefrom if it fails to use reasonable care and diligence to repair a defect or obstruction which it is its duty to anticipate and provide against,⁵⁴ or which is visible and has existed for such length of time as to charge it with knowledge which it would have acquired by proper inspection,⁵⁵ even though no complaint thereof was ever made to the company.⁵⁶ The company is charged with notice of a defective condition which it has created;⁵⁷ and, if a defect is visible, notice to the company is not necessary in order to make it liable for an injury caused thereby.⁵⁸ It is not, however, liable for injuries caused by a defect or obstruction of which it has no knowledge and which has occurred so recently that the company could not, in the exercise of ordinary care, have discovered and repaired it before the accident.⁵⁹ On the other hand, where the duty to remedy a defect in the street immediately connected with the track is affirmative and absolute, notice is not necessary,⁶⁰ although such rule does not apply where the street railroad is operated by a municipality.⁶¹

§ 223. Approval of Officials or Compliance with Requirements as Excuse

The fact that a street railroad company has lawful permission to operate, or that it has complied with the requirements of its charter or a municipal ordinance, will not relieve the company from liability for injuries caused by its failure to use due care in constructing and maintaining its tracks and equipment.

Although the fact that the company constructs and maintains its tracks in the manner required by ordinance cannot constitute negligence on its part,⁶² and although the company is not liable where it has constructed its tracks in accordance with the general plan supervised and approved by the municipality and it does not appear that there was any safer plan in common or known use,⁶³ if a street railroad company fails to use due care in constructing and maintaining its tracks and equipment in a reasonably safe condition for persons and vehicles using the street or highway, it is not relieved from liability for injuries caused thereby by the fact that it has lawful permission to operate its road,⁶⁴ or that in constructing and maintaining its road it has complied with the requirements of its charter or a municipal ordinance,⁶⁵ or with the plans, specifications, and requirements of a commission appointed for that purpose,⁶⁶ or by the fact that the tracks are constructed to the satisfaction of certain officers whose duty it is to pass on and approve them.⁶⁷ Thus, if the company constructs its tracks at a grade, which at some time in the future is to be the grade of the street, and such construction renders the street unsafe, it is negligence on the part of the company,⁶⁸ unless it does so under direction of the proper authorities.⁶⁹

The rights of the public, after the granting of a license to a street railway company to erect a pole in the street, are governed by the license, if the authority to erect and maintain the pole and box was exercised reasonably,⁷⁰ and, where the company does nothing not authorized by the license, it is not liable for injuries received by one who ran into it,⁷¹ even if without such license the pole would be a nuisance.⁷² However, it has been held that the company is not protected from liability based on the maintenance of a nuisance because the tracks in the street were in accordance with the franchise granted to it by the municipality, as the municipality, having no legal right to create and maintain a street in such condition, could not authorize another to do so.⁷³

Trolley wire poles. Since acceptance by a street railroad company of a license to locate trolley wire poles at the curb does not eo instante revoke the prior authorization to locate center line poles,⁷⁴ a center line pole authorized by the prior license is not illegally in the street.⁷⁵

However, the fact that a street railroad company has been granted permission to locate trolley poles in the street does not relieve the company from liability for injury caused by negligently locating such poles without due regard for the safety of the public,⁷⁶ although it has been held that a company is not liable for an injury caused by the location of a pole where the company had no right to select the location, but placed it at a point pursuant to official command or approval,⁷⁷ but there is also authority to the contrary.⁷⁸

roads, to cross does not relieve the motorman from his duty of using reasonable care.⁸⁰ Where neither of two street railroad companies has any right, by usage or otherwise, of precedence at the intersection of their roads, each company owes to the other the duty of exercising reasonable care, and has a right to assume that the other will fulfill its duty until apprised to the contrary;⁸¹ and, if one car has the right to the crossing by arriving there first, the person in control of an approaching car is bound so to govern the movement thereof as that, whether the first car goes fast or slowly or even stops on the crossing, he can stop his car before striking it.⁸² Where, however, by statute or ordinance the cars of one company have a right of way over the cars of another company, such regulation should be recognized.⁸³ It is also the duty of the person in charge of a car which is approaching another car ahead on the same track to maintain such a distance from it, or so to reduce the speed of his own car, that he can stop it in time to avoid a collision,⁸⁴ particularly where such precautions are expressly required by the rules of the company.⁸⁵

Passengers on cars of other companies. The high degree of care demanded from a carrier for the protection of passengers on its cars, as discussed in Carriers § 678, is not demanded from a street railroad with respect to a passenger on the car of another company whose line crosses the line of the first mentioned company,⁸⁶ and a company on whose car he is not a passenger is bound to use toward such person only reasonable and ordinary care under the circumstances.⁸⁷ In determining liability as between two different streetcar systems for injuries to a passenger sustained in a collision of their respective cars, the right of way is not the controlling factor,⁸⁸ but right of way is available as a defense only where the operator claiming it proceeded with due care.⁸⁹

Violation of ordinance regulating the right of way of cars of different companies is not necessarily negligence per se,⁹⁰ but is merely evidence of negligence.⁹¹

§ 225. — At Steam Railway Crossings

Persons in charge of a streetcar should use reasonable care to avoid a collision when approaching a grade crossing of a steam railroad.

It is the duty of the persons in charge of a streetcar to use reasonable care to avoid a collision with an engine or train of a steam railroad which the street railroad crosses at grade.⁹² It is ordinarily the duty of such persons to stop the streetcar before reaching the steam railroad crossing, and not to cross until an employee of the company has gone ahead to ascertain whether the way is clear and, where there is more than one employee, has signaled the car to proceed,⁹³ and, as discussed supra § 161, this duty is sometimes imposed by statute or ordinance, or by contract between the companies,⁹⁴ or by a custom,⁹⁵ or by instruction of the street railroad company.⁹⁶ Where the duty is thus imposed, it should be exercised at crossings having gates and watchmen the same as at other crossings,⁹⁷ even though there is but one employee on the car,⁹⁸ but there is also authority to the contrary where there is only a single employee.⁹⁹ If the view of such employee is obscured by dust and smoke, he must delay signaling for a reasonable length of time to allow the dust and smoke to clear away.¹ On the other hand, in order that a street railroad company may be liable for its negligence in this respect, it must appear that the injury was directly caused by such negligence.² A statute requiring all trains to stop within a certain distance when approaching the crossing of another railroad has no application to a street railroad,³ and does not apply to a crossing of a railroad company and a street railroad company,⁴ or make a streetcar company a railroad by the granting of permission to an inter-urban company to use its tracks.⁵

§ 226. Collisions with Animals or Vehicles in General

A street railroad is liable for the failure of its motorman to use ordinary care to discover animals or vehicles on or near the tracks, and for injuries resulting from his failure to use reasonable and ordinary care to avoid colliding therewith.

A street railroad is liable for the failure of its motorman to use ordinary care to discover animals or vehicles on or near the tracks, and for injuries resulting from his failure to use reasonable and ordinary care to avoid colliding therewith,⁶ or for injuries resulting to persons, animals, or other property, if through the incompetency, inattention, or carelessness of its servants a car collides with an animal or vehicle on the track ahead,⁷ or with an animal or vehicle so near the track that the car could not pass without striking it.⁸ A street railroad company is not liable for the resulting injuries, if the servants in charge of the car exercise ordinary care and prudence, and the collision is merely an accident;⁹ or if a vehicle comes into danger at a period so shortly before the accident that the motorman, exercising ordinary care, does not have a reasonable time in which to act,¹⁰ or in the face of imminent danger commits an error in judgment;¹¹ and it has been held that the street railroad is not liable if each party used due care,¹² or if each failed to use due care.¹³

A street railway company is not liable for injuries resulting from the contributory negligence of the injured person, as discussed infra §§ 263-287, or from some intervening independent cause;¹⁴ but a street railroad may be liable where its negligence concurs with the negligent act of an independent actor, which contributes directly to cause the injury,¹⁵ or if the injury was avoidable, notwithstanding contributory negligence, as considered infra §§ 288-295. The company is not liable for the failure of the motorman to keep a lookout where such failure does not contribute to the injury.¹⁶ Where an automobile, owned by a city and used by its superintendent of streets, was being taken to the garage after having taken a salesman to the home of such superintendent for the purpose of transacting official business, it was not being used in violation of a law prohibiting the use of such automobiles without authority for a forbidden purpose, so as to affect the liability of a street railroad when it was struck by the negligent operation of a streetcar, notwithstanding an unexecuted purpose of taking a third person home on the chauffeur's route to the garage.¹⁷ The liability of a street railroad company where there is a collision between a local train and a vehicle will not be affected by the fact that the company operates interurban cars over the same track.¹⁸

Rear end collision. Ordinarily a streetcar motorman is not bound to look out for those who may run into the rear of his car,¹⁹ and to hold him to such a standard of duty would seriously and unnecessarily interfere with streetcar traffic.²⁰ If, however, the motorman should have perceived that the stopping of his car would imperil a following vehicle, he was under a duty to take due care to prevent damage.²¹

§ 227. Nature and Extent of Liability in General

A street railroad company and a third person may be jointly and severally liable for negligence in which each participated.

A street railroad company and the owner of a vehicle with which a street railroad car collides may be held jointly and severally liable for injuries to a third person occasioned by the negligence of the company and the owner.²² Where a nonnegligent guest is injured in a collision between the motor vehicle in which he is riding and a streetcar, due to the concurrent primary negligence of the host and the motorman, both the host and the street railroad company have been held liable.²³

§ 228. Duty and Care Required in General

In the absence of imposition of a different standard by statute or ordinance, a street railroad company is under a duty to exercise ordinary care to avoid collision with an animal or other vehicle.

In the absence of statutory or municipal regulations, a street railroad company is under a duty to use ordinary care to avoid collision with an animal or vehicle,²⁴ that is, such care as would be exercised

Intoxicated motorist

Streetcar motorman must exercise ordinary care to avoid collision with a motorist if the latter is in fact intoxicated and in peril.—Murray v. Kansas City Public Service Co., Mo., 61 S.W.2d 334.

by a reasonably prudent man under like circumstances.²⁵ As a general rule ordinary care requires that the motorman of a car should keep a lookout ahead for animals or vehicles on or near the track,²⁶ and keep the car under such control as will probably prevent a collision,²⁷ and the motorman cannot be relieved of his duty to keep a lookout by having it imposed on others.²⁸ However, a motorman has the right to assume that drivers of vehicles on the street will use ordinary care,²⁹ until he becomes aware, or in the exercise of ordinary care should become aware, that a driver is in danger,³⁰ and, when a collision becomes imminent, he must exercise a degree of care commensurate with the circumstances of the particular case,³¹ using such means as a motorman fit for his job and intent on avoiding an impending peril would use to avoid a collision.³²

Although running a streetcar into a vehicle ordinarily is negligence,³³ negligence on the part of the company cannot be inferred from the mere fact that there was a collision between a car and an animal or vehicle, as discussed infra § 305. In general, no higher degree of care is required of the operators of a streetcar than is required of drivers of other vehicles;³⁴ thus, a street railroad company is not required to exercise extraordinary precaution to avoid a collision,³⁵ and it is not an insurer of safety.³⁶

Collision on private right of way. A street railroad company is not liable for damage resulting from a collision between its car and a vehicle of a trespasser, occurring on its own private right of way, unless caused by the wanton or willful misconduct of the operator of its car.³⁷

Curves and turns. The rule of ordinary care does not require a motorman on rounding a curve either to warn a vehicle driver that the rear of the streetcar will swing out and overlap the street,³⁸ or to watch the vehicle as the streetcar continues its course,³⁹ or to keep a lookout to the rear generally,⁴⁰ and where he has stopped before starting around the curve and is unaware of a vehicle which has approached the rear of the streetcar, he is not negligent in starting the car without first determining conditions at the rear of the streetcar.⁴¹ On the other hand, where a motorman observes a vehicle and is charged with knowledge that unless it is moved the overhang of the streetcar will cause its rear to collide with the vehicle, it may be actionable negligence for him to proceed to round the curve while the vehicle remains too near the track.⁴²

No duty to look to rear

A streetcar motorman who was unaware of presence of automobile at rear of streetcar had no duty to look to rear of streetcar after picking up a passenger and before starting around curve, in order to determine whether rear end of streetcar would strike the automobile when the rear end would swing out, so as to authorize occupant of automobile to recover from streetcar company for injuries sustained when automobile was struck by rear end of streetcar.—*Harrington v. and a motorman is negligent in attempting to pass a buggy on a curve when it is within range of the bumpers on the car, and the motorman has an opportunity to see such fact.⁴³

When approaching a turn in the street, the motorman is under the duty to keep a lookout and have his car under reasonable control.⁴⁴

Motorman's illness. Where a streetcar motorman is suddenly stricken with illness rendering him unconscious, and he had no reason to anticipate such an occurrence, he is not negligent when the streetcar runs out of control and collides with an animal or vehicle.⁴⁵

Operation of streetcar backward without audible warning and without notice has been held negligence as a matter of law.⁴⁶

§ 229. Violation of Statute or Ordinance in General

With respect to negligence in a collision, a violation of a duty imposed by statute or ordinance on a street railroad company may constitute negligence.

Right of way

With respect to issue of motorman's negligence in colliding with bus, fact that streetcars run on rails and that ordinance gives streetcars right of way over other vehicles must be considered.—Snider v. Sand Springs Ry. Co., supra.

Right-hand rule immaterial under facts

In action by automobile guest against owner of trolley bus for injuries sustained in collision between automobile and bus when automobile crossed over onto its left side of street, and bus driver, to avoid collision, drove onto his left side of street, and automobile then crossed over to its right side of the street and struck bus at an angle of forty-five degrees, statutes requiring the operation of vehicles on the right-hand side of the highway have no application.—LaVigne v. Portland Traction Co., 170 P.2d 709, 179 Or. 221.

Failure to comply with penal ordinance relating to the operation of streetcars in a city, and providing for the punishment of a violation thereof, is negligence.—Denver City Tramway Co. v. Carson, 123 P. 680, 21 Colo.App. 604.

Passing school

Statute requiring driver of vehicle, including streetcar, to use extreme care in passing public hospital, firehouse, or school was applicable where trolley car crossing school driveway struck automobile conveying student and members of his family and his escort to state teachers' college to enable student to attend school dance,

With respect to negligence in a collision, a statute or ordinance may impose a higher degree of care on a street railroad company than that required by common law.⁴⁷ In determining whether the company was negligent, the court may consider the duties prescribed by municipal ordinances,⁴⁸ and the violation of a duty imposed by statute or ordinance may be evidence of negligence,⁴⁹ or constitute negligence per se.⁵⁰

Coasting in street. A streetcar motorman is under no duty to anticipate that a person would violate an ordinance against coasting in the street merely because the right exists to use the street in a lawful manner.⁵¹

§ 230. Speed in General

A streetcar should be run at such a reasonable speed as will probably preclude a collision with an animal or vehicle, and what is a reasonable speed will in general depend on all the circumstances involved.

A streetcar must be run at such a reasonable speed as will probably prevent collisions.⁵² In the absence of a statute or ordinance prescribing a maximum speed,⁵³ what is a reasonable speed, with as against contention that statute applied only while school was in session and protected only persons of school age entering and leaving public school in large numbers.—Trent v. International Ry. Co., 290 N.Y.S. 915, 249 App.Div. 17, affirmed 7 N.E. 2d 725, 273 N.Y. 622.

Lack of lookout

Violation of ordinance requiring that, when a car is in charge of one man, he shall be stationed on the front end can be relied on as an act of negligence, as where an automobile was struck by the foremost of several flat cars being pushed by an electric engine from behind, with no one on such flat cars observing a lookout.—Oswald v. Utah Light & Ry. Co., 117 P. 46, 39 Utah 245.

53. Wis.—Campanelli v. Milwaukee Elec. Ry. & Transport Co., 3 N.W. 2d 390, 242 Wis. 505.

respect to liability for collisions, must be determined from a consideration of all the surrounding circumstances.⁵⁴ As a general rule, a streetcar motorman should not operate his car at such a rate of speed that it cannot be stopped within the limit of his vision,⁵⁵ and ordinary care requires a motorman to slow up if by doing so he can avoid a collision.⁵⁶ Although the street railroad is liable for injuries resulting from a negligent rate of speed,⁵⁷ there can be no recovery predicated on an excessive rate of speed unless such speed was the proximate cause of the injury, as discussed supra § 212. No recovery may be had unless the person injured used ordinary care to avoid the injury,⁵⁸ and it seems that the street railroad is not liable if both the motorman and the driver of a vehicle with which a streetcar collided were running at a negligent rate of speed.⁵⁹

Operation of an interurban car or a streetcar at a speed in excess of the limit authorized by a statute or ordinance is ordinarily negligence,⁶⁰ but the speed of a streetcar may be negligently excessive although not exceeding the legal limit.⁶¹ Violation of a statute or ordinance as to rate of speed has been held to be evidence of negligence,⁶² or prima facie negligence,⁶³ although such ordinance imposes a penalty for its violation,⁶⁴ and it has also been held that the violation of such a statute or ordinance may constitute negligence per se.⁶⁵ It has further been held that one injured in a collision with a streetcar can rely on an ordinance limiting the speed of streetcars, although he did not know of it.⁶⁶

Violation of company rule. The violation by a streetcar motorman of a company rule to run slowly at a certain point does not of itself give an injured person a right of action.⁶⁷

§ 231. Animals or Vehicles Crossing Track in Front of Car

A motorman must use due care to control his car and avoid a collision with an animal or vehicle crossing the streetcar track.

A motorman is under a general duty, applicable when an animal or vehicle crosses the track in front of him, to have his car under such control that it can be stopped in any situation that may reasonably arise under the existing circumstances.⁶⁸ After a motorman discovers, or, in the exercise of ordinary care, should discover, a vehicle attempting to cross the track in front of the car, he is bound to use every degree of care in his power, consistent with the safety of his passengers, to avoid injury,⁶⁹ according to the authorities on the question, such as slackening his speed⁷⁰ or stopping the car;⁷¹ and, if unable to stop the car, he is still under the duty of checking its speed;⁷² and, if a motorman assumes to run his car at an excessive rate of speed, he cannot be excused from his duty to give such warning as is commensurate with the increased hazard.⁷³ A motorman is not warranted in assuming that the driver of a vehicle will refrain from crossing the tracks in view of the car,⁷⁴ and cannot disregard the possibility of a motorist's crossing the track to enter a private way at right angles to the highway on which the track is laid.⁷⁵ Signaling a motorist to come ahead, and then failing to give him sufficient time to cross the track, constitutes negligence on the part of the motorman.⁷⁶

On the other hand, the rule as to the degree of care required of a motorman when approaching a street crossing, discussed infra § 238, does not apply to cars approaching a vehicle between street crossings where it appears that the driver will have no occasion to drive across the tracks;⁷⁷ and, where there is nothing to cause the motorman of a moving streetcar to apprehend that a person driving ahead of him will attempt to cross the track, he need exercise only reasonable care,⁷⁸ to be measured by the apparent situation and the dangers naturally to be expected under the circumstances;⁷⁹ and a street railroad company is not liable if the motorman did everything possible to avoid injury.⁸⁰ A motorman who sees the driver of a vehicle proceeding along the track without crossing at the usual place, in the absence of anything to warn him,⁸¹ may assume, in the exercise of reasonable care, that such driver does not intend to cross,⁸² and, therefore, need not hold his car in such good control as if he saw such driver approaching a crossing.⁸³ Where a person in charge of a vehicle has safely crossed, the motorman is justified in assuming that such person will keep at a safe distance from the track until the car has passed.⁸⁴ The distance the car runs after colliding with a vehicle crossing the track has a bearing on the question of speed and proper control,⁸⁵ but the question of speed is material only when it is the direct and proximate cause of the injury, as discussed supra § 12.

A motorman is not negligent when a collision occurs before he has reason to suspect danger;⁸⁶ and, if an automobile attempts to cross the tracks

Skid

A streetcar motorman is not bound so to control streetcar as to avoid injury to a vehicle which might sud-

when the car is so near that, although it was under control, he could not stop it in time to prevent a collision, the company is not negligent.⁸⁷ The operator of a street railroad vehicle may assume that other vehicles will be run at a lawful rate of speed,⁸⁸ and, until such time as risk of collision becomes imminent, may assume that an approaching vehicle will wait for the streetcar to pass before coming onto the tracks.⁸⁹ However, it has been held that ordinary care is not sufficient,⁹⁰ and that a motorman cannot wait until the danger becomes manifest,⁹¹ and, when driving at such speed that he cannot stop the car on seeing a vehicle crossing the track, he cannot excuse himself by showing that he used the utmost effort to stop after seeing such vehicle.⁹²

Although a street railroad may run its cars single or in trains,⁹³ it must do so with due regard for the safety of those who have occasion to cross the track in driving out from yards of houses situated along the track.⁹⁴ Where one driving a team of horses turned on the track to cross it, and was struck by a car going at a speed in violation of an ordinance, he could recover although he failed to look before so crossing, where it is in evidence that the collision would not have occurred if the car had been running at a speed within such ordinance.⁹⁵

Sounding gong. Ordinarily a motorman is not required to sound the gong continuously in the middle of the block,⁹⁶ or until he sees, or should have seen, that one on either side of the track indicated a purpose to cross, or approached dangerously near,⁹⁷ but, when he sees a vehicle attempting to cross the track in front of him, he is under a duty to signal his approach.⁹⁸ Where there was a collision with an automobile crossing the track, and there is evidence tending to show that the motorman of the streetcar violated an ordinance requiring him to sound the bell, if the ordinance was violated, such violation is negligence on the part of the street railway.⁹⁹ Failure to sound the gong is not important, however, where one injured in a crossing collision had knowledge of the approach of the car,¹ or where the sounding of the gong could not have prevented the accident.² Where a motorman sees a vehicle standing in his path and time permits, he should take such measures as may be necessary to avoid collision, and merely sounding his gong while proceeding at high speed does not suffice.³

Sudden turn

Where motorist pulled to right off highway onto first set of streetcar tracks to avoid head-on collision, operator of streetcar on second set of tracks was not required to anticipate that motorist would seek to pass over second set of tracks rather than return to highway, and streetcar company was not liable for accident resulting when motorist turned suddenly onto second set of tracks in front of on-coming streetcar.—*Strotsky v. Motorist's loss of control

Where automobile wheel struck a rut within and parallel to trolley car track, and as automobile reached end of rut it skidded across track and onto an adjoining track where it was struck, while it was still in motion, by an oncoming trolley car, the failure of the motorman to give warning of the approach of the car did not constitute negligence, so as to render street railroad company liable for death of automobile passenger resulting from injuries sustained in the collision, especially since driver of automobile had knowledge of the approach of the car, and since driver having lost control of movement of automobile would not have been aided by the giving of a warning.—Cox v. Wilkes-Barre Ry. Corp., supra.

Negligence in starting. It is negligence to start the car while a person is driving across the track a short distance away in front of the car.⁴

§ 232. Passing Animals or Vehicles

The duty to exercise due and reasonable care rests on a motorman in respect of vehicles passing him or which he is passing.

The duty to exercise due and reasonable care rests on a motorman with respect to a vehicle passing the car,⁵ or a vehicle which the car is passing.⁶ However, the motorman may assume that the driver of a vehicle will leave the track to permit the free passage of the car,⁷ especially when warning has been given;⁸ and, where he is running parallel to a moving vehicle, he may assume that it will not cross his track,⁹ and, although running at an excessive rate of speed, that a vehicle at the side of the track and out of the range of danger will not be moved in the direction of the passing car;¹⁰ but the question of whether notice was given of the approach of a car is immaterial when the driver of a vehicle knows that it is approaching.¹¹ Although a motorman's error in judgment in passing a vehicle may under some circumstances be actionable negligence,¹² he is not required to anticipate the unexpected swerving of a vehicle after it has turned out sufficiently to enable the car to pass,¹³ or that a vehicle will be driven into the car after the front part has safely passed;¹⁴ and, where injury results from an unexpected cause not reasonably to be anticipated, the streetcar company is not responsible.¹⁵

§ 233. Meeting Animals or Vehicles

On meeting an animal or vehicle the motorman of a streetcar must exercise care commensurate with the circumstances.

When meeting a vehicle, the motorman of a streetcar must exercise the reasonable care of an ordinarily prudent person according to the circumstances,¹⁶ and it has been held that a motorman owes a greater duty of care to avoid injury to the occupant of a vehicle approaching from the opposite direction on the same track than in a case where the approaching vehicle is entirely on the road beside the track.¹⁷ Where an animal or vehicle is approaching the car or track, the motorman should stop his car if necessary to avoid a collision,¹⁸ and he is under the duty of having the car under such control as will permit it to be stopped in time to prevent such collision,¹⁹ and has no right to wait before stopping until the vehicle is actually on the tracks.²⁰

Inability to pass parked car

On the other hand, when meeting an approaching vehicle the motorman is not bound so to control his car as to avoid all possible accidents,²¹ and the streetcar company is not liable for damage from a head-on collision with a vehicle where it appeared in front of the streetcar so suddenly that the motorman lacked sufficient time to avoid the accident,²² or where the streetcar company and its operator have observed all proper precautions.²³ The motorman is not required to take added precautions,²⁴ and is not bound to stop whenever he sees an approaching animal or vehicle.²⁵ The motorman need not anticipate that an approaching motor vehicle will swerve in front of the streetcar,²⁶ or that when nearing an object in its path the motor vehicle will turn onto the trolley track instead of stopping.²⁷ He may assume that the driver of the motor vehicle is in possession of his faculties,²⁸ and, until the contrary appears, he may assume that an approaching animal or vehicle will be carefully driven,²⁹ and that the driver will see the car in time to take the necessary precautions for his safety.³⁰ He may also assume the animal or vehicle will not be driven onto the track,³¹ or, if on the track, that it will be turned off,³² and, if an accident could not have been avoided by the exercise of ordinary care on the part of the motorman, the street railroad will not be liable.³³ If a motorman, using ordinary prudence, errs in a matter of judgment as to stopping the car in time, or as to the method of stopping it, it is not negligence for which one injured in a collision can recover.³⁴

Although a motorman is not bound to anticipate negligence on the part of the driver of an approaching automobile,³⁵ he must exercise reasonable diligence in analyzing the situation.³⁶ Thus, where the necessity for such action should appear to a reasonably alert and prudent man, the motorman must give

Speed of trolley held reasonable

Where trolley car was approaching intersection, on a straight track in wide thoroughfare and during the early morning when there was little vehicular traffic which was proceeding in direction opposite to that of the car, fact that the car was traveling at speed of from thirty to thirty-five miles per hour when it struck an oncoming automobile which had struck a rut and skidded across an adjoining track and into the path of the trolley car did not constitute negligence so as to render street railroad company liable for death of automobile passenger resulting from injuries sustained in collision.—Cox v. Restricted to tracks

A streetcar motorman, on observing automobile approaching where there is ample room for automobile to pass, may act on assumption that before reaching place of danger automobile will turn aside and pass without injury, notwithstanding automobile and streetcar have equal rights in the street, since the streetcar path of travel is limited to the tracks.—Hauser v. Public Service Co. of Indiana, 111 S.W.2d 657, 271 Ky. 206.

Sufficient care shown by motorman

(1) Failure of motorist whose automobile had passed onto car tracks, due to jog in tracks to narrower part of street, to observe approaching streetcar did not charge streetcar company with negligence so as to render it liable for head-on collision where motorman, on observing automobile, had rung bell and brought car almost to stop before collision.—Public Service Co. of Indiana v. Schneider's Adm'r, 85 S.W.2d 676, 260 Ky. 334, 102 A.L.R. 712.

(2) In view of superior right of streetcar company to the use of its track, a motorman was justified in assuming that an approaching truck would wait behind parked cars instead of coming onto the track and was not negligent in continuing ahead until the truck swerved onto the track, resulting in a head-on collision.—Fasano v. Philadelphia Rapid Transit Co., 159 A. 219, 104 Pa.Super. 124.

warning,³⁷ or stop his car,³⁸ as where it appears that an approaching driver is oblivious to his peril,³⁹ or will be put in peril,⁴⁰ or that the driver of an automobile is so near the track that he cannot stop,⁴¹ or if it becomes reasonably apparent that the driver is intent on going upon the track,⁴² or if his conduct is such as would lead a motorman of ordinary prudence to conclude that such driver is going upon the tracks in front of the car,⁴³ or if the danger of collision becomes imminent.⁴⁴ A motorman is chargeable with the duty, on observing that an approaching horse which is becoming unmanageable is likely to go in front of the car, to take immediate precautions to avoid a collision.⁴⁵

Sounding gong. On meeting an automobile, the motorman of a streetcar is not required to sound the gong or give warning where there is room for the automobile to pass without injury,⁴⁶ and his failure to sound the gong is immaterial where in any event the performance of such duty would have been unavailing.⁴⁷ If the street railroad fully performs its duty toward a motorist, there will be no liability on it for damage from a head-on collision even though the motorman disobeyed a company rule requiring him to signal.⁴⁸ On the other hand, where a motorman is required by an ordinance to sound his gong when he discovers, or in the exercise of ordinary care should discover, vehicles which may go upon the track, he cannot assume that a wagon being driven toward the track will be stopped,⁴⁹ and such an ordinance requires affirmative action on the part of a motorman to give due warning to vehicles moving toward the track, so that they may stop before going thereon.⁵⁰

Taking notice of law. A street railroad is bound to take notice of a law requiring vehicles using parts of a highway covered by its tracks, on meeting its cars coming from an opposite direction, to keep to the right, and to control its overtaking cars coming from an opposite direction, in anticipation that such other vehicles might so turn upon the tracks in obedience to the law.⁵¹ An ordinance which requires the agents of a street railroad to look out for vehicles approaching the tracks is continuous,⁵² and applies to all portions of the track,⁵³ and the failure of the motorman to see an approaching automobile from a point from which it could have been seen in the exercise of ordinary care affords no defense.⁵⁴

Where streetcar was standing still when an automobile approaching from the front turned onto the track to pass another automobile standing at the curb as he then had room to do, starting the streetcar toward the automobile so as to strike it before it could be turned off the track constitutes negligence.⁵⁵

§ 234. Approaching Animals or Vehicles on or near Track

Although a streetcar has the right of way, this will not excuse its motorman for a careless collision with an animal or vehicle, and he is under a duty to keep due lookout and to exercise ordinary care in respect of animals or vehicles he approaches.

Although a streetcar may be entitled to the right of way on that part of a street covered by the tracks, as discussed supra §§ 207-210, this will not excuse a careless collision with another vehicle.⁵⁶ The motorman of a streetcar is under the duty of keeping a lookout for animals and vehicles on or near the track ahead, and he is required to exercise ordinary care for their safety,⁵⁷ should regulate his speed in accordance with prevailing traffic conditions,⁵⁸ and will be guilty of negligence imposing liability on the streetcar company where through lack of due care his car collides with an overtaken vehicle.⁵⁹ However, a motorman may assume, within the limits of prudence,⁶⁰ that a vehicle will be turned off the track in time to avoid a collision when time and opportunity permit,⁶¹ and, in the absence of anything to warn him,⁶² that a vehicle will not suddenly turn onto the track in front of him,⁶³ and negligence cannot be inferred from the failure of the motorman of a streetcar to anticipate that an automobile would go on the track in front of the streetcar.⁶⁴

On the other hand, a motorman has no right to proceed without regard for the presence of a vehicle,⁶⁵ and the assumption that the driver of the vehicle will exercise reasonable care cannot be indulged beyond the time the danger of collision becomes imminent,⁶⁶ and after the time when it is possible for him to control his car.⁶⁷ Thus, if he sees, or by the exercise of ordinary care could see, that the person in charge of the animal or vehicle is ignorant or heedless of his danger, or that a collision is otherwise likely to occur, it is his duty to use all reasonable means within his power to prevent it⁶⁸ by giving proper warning, as discussed

Broad daylight

A streetcar motorman may not carelessly run down an automobile in plain view in broad daylight, even if he has the right of way, and be blameless for his failure to exercise ordinary care to avoid injuring another.—Scerca v. Philadelphia Transp. Co., supra.

Not absolute right

Right of way of a streetcar is not absolute or exclusive under all conditions, and possession of the right of way does not relieve a motorman of the general duty to use due care to avoid injury to others and to make reasonable efforts to prevent a collision.—Brule v. Union St. Ry. Co., 52 N.E.2d 388, 315 Mass. 268.

Extent of duty

All that is required of streetcar motorman approaching or overtaking a vehicle on, or in such proximity to, track as to suggest danger of collision, is to give reasonable notice of approach of car and so likewise to control its movement as in exercise of reasonable care would avoid running over or into it.—Gardner v. Capital Transit Co., 152 F.2d 288, 80 U.S. App.D.C. 297, certiorari denied 66 S. Ct. 824, 327 U.S. 795, 90 L.Ed. 1021.

Position of vehicle ahead

In determining whether speed of a streetcar which allegedly overtook and ran into plaintiff's automobile traveling in the streetcar tracks near center of block was excessive, jury was required to consider whether motorman, as the situation presented itself to him, had a right to assume that plaintiff's automobile would, or would not, remain in the path of the streetcar.—Manzella v. infra § 236, or checking the speed of the car.⁶⁹ The mere presence of a wagon being driven along a street beside a street railroad is not such an indication that it is liable to turn onto the track as to require the motorman to slacken speed in anticipation of such a move;⁷⁰ and, although he may not be under an absolute duty to stop,⁷¹ he is under the duty of having the car under such control that it may be stopped after he becomes able to discover a vehicle on the track, and before a collision occurs.⁷² If there is an object in the path of the streetcar a sufficient distance ahead to permit the car to stop, the motorman should not deliberately run into it, but on the contrary should so govern the speed of his car as to avoid a collision.⁷³

When confronted by an emergency, prompt action is required on the part of the motorman to bring the car to a standstill,⁷⁴ particularly where there is a statutory or municipal regulation requiring a motorman to stop his car on the first appearance of danger;⁷⁵ and this duty does not necessarily cease when a driver changes his position with respect to the approaching car;⁷⁶ but if, in the exercise of due care, the motorman is unable to stop the car by the use of all reasonable means to do so, the street railroad is not guilty of actionable negligence.⁷⁷ Although a vehicle should not unreasonably obstruct the passage of a streetcar,⁷⁸ the streetcar employees are not justified in attempting to shove a vehicle aside by running against it.⁷⁹ When an approaching automobile has skidded on track in an attempt to round a curve in the street, the motorman is required to exercise such reasonable care as a person of ordinary prudence and presence of mind would exercise under like circumstances.⁸⁰

Approaching children. A motorman whose streetcar is approaching a child cyclist of tender years is obligated to take all precautions conceivable to an intelligent man in order to avoid a collision.⁸¹

Standing car. It was negligence for the motorman of a streetcar to start the car toward an automobile and strike it before it could be turned off the track, where such automobile was turned on the track to pass another automobile while the car was standing still, and where the automobile would have had room to pass if it had remained so.⁸²

Streetcar conductor owes no duty to keep a lookout for persons driving along the track in front of the car.⁸³

Violation of ordinance relating to cars stopping to take on passengers is not negligence as to a person riding on a vehicle struck by a car.⁸⁴

§ 235. — Parked or Stalled Vehicles

Both the motorman and the conductor of a street railroad car are under a duty to use ordinary diligence in respect of parked or stalled vehicles.

When a vehicle is parked beside the track, both

Parked auto

Where a motorman observed a small boy riding a bicycle ahead of him, who kept close to the curb except when coming to parked automobiles, at which time the boy would turn toward the track in order to pass the parked cars, the motorman should have realized that the space between a parked car and the trolley was too narrow for the child to occupy without being struck by the passing trolley, and if the cyclist gave no indication of heeding a warning gong, the motorman should have stopped or taken other precautions to avoid striking the cyclist.—Kahn v. the motorman and the conductor must use ordinary diligence under the circumstances;⁸⁵ it is the duty of the motorman to approach carefully,⁸⁶ and to see that the front end of the car may pass safely,⁸⁷ and the duty of the conductor to watch for, and avoid, obstructions which the car may meet at any time before it has entirely passed.⁸⁸ Where the motorman knows, or by the use of ordinary care should know, that a wagon is so close to the track that the slightest movement of the horse attached thereto will bring it into contact with the car, it is his duty to stop the car until the wagon is moved to a place of safety,⁸⁹ and, if necessary, a motorman is under the duty to stop the car until a vehicle is moved;⁹⁰ but it has been held that the operatives may assume that a parked vehicle has been so placed that it will not be moved so as to strike the car after it has partly passed,⁹¹ and that, where a wagon is standing at the side of the track far enough away for the car to pass without striking it, but the horse attached thereto becomes frightened too late to stop the car, and backs the wagon into it, the street railroad is not liable.⁹² Where the violation of an ordinance as to speed contributes directly to the injury caused by colliding with a vehicle standing at the side of the track, there can be a recovery,⁹³ if the injured person was exercising due care.⁹⁴

Where a motor vehicle is stalled on the tracks, the motorman of a streetcar is put especially on his guard,⁹⁵ and his conduct with respect thereto is to be judged by the standard of care that would reasonably be expected from a prudent man acting in a like emergency.⁹⁶ Under his duty to keep a lookout for vehicles on the track, when he discovers, or in the exercise of ordinary care should discover, a stalled vehicle on or near the track in a place of apparent peril, it is his duty to exercise ordinary care to prevent a collision,⁹⁷ and the running of an interurban car on a public highway at such a speed that it could not be stopped within the distance within which an automobile stalled on the track could be seen is negligence.⁹⁸ When it becomes apparent that the vehicle is stalled, the motorman is under a duty to slacken speed,⁹⁹ and, if it becomes clear that a stalled vehicle cannot be moved in time to avoid a collision, it is the duty of the motorman to bring the car to a stop,¹ even if he sees it at a place on the tracks where he is under no duty to anticipate its presence.² The fact that a vehicle was stalled on the tracks at a private crossing not frequented by the general public is a circumstance for consideration as bearing on the degree of care which the motorman should have exercised in maintaining a lookout for vehicles on the track.³ The fact that a streetcar which collided with a stalled automobile was running within the maximum speed limit fixed by an ordinance or statute does not absolve the street railroad of liability,⁴ or prevent a finding that such speed was excessive.⁵

§ 236. — Duty to Give Warning

Generally speaking, where a motorman sees an animal or vehicle in a dangerous position on or near the track, it is his duty to give a reasonable signal or warning of the approach of the streetcar.

As a general rule, if the motorman sees, or by the exercise of ordinary care could see, an animal or vehicle in a dangerous position on or near the track, it is his duty to give a reasonable signal or warning of the approach of the car,⁶ and failure on the part of a motorman to give audible warning of the approach of a car going at a high rate of speed is evidence of negligence.⁷ However, prudence may or may not require that a signal be given on approaching from the rear.⁸ Warning signals may be unnecessary where the person in charge of the vehicle has knowledge of the approach of the car,⁹ and, where the giving of warning would add nothing to the notice which a person in charge of an animal or vehicle already had of the approach of the streetcar, the question of warnings is usually immaterial.¹⁰

Although it has been held that a motorman cannot assume that a vehicle which he is approaching from the rear will leave the track unless warning is given of the approach of the streetcar,¹¹ or on giving warning that all within hearing will take notice that the car is approaching,¹² where he gives such warning he has the right, to a limited extent at least, to act on the assumption that an animal or vehicle will, if on the track, be turned out in time to avoid a collision,¹³ or, if about to turn on the track, will desist from so doing,¹⁴ and, if the occupants of a vehicle can hear the warning by the exercise of reasonable care and attention, but drive suddenly onto the track so as to make it impossible to stop the car by the exercise of ordinary care and reasonable effort, there is no negligence on the part of the motorman.¹⁵ However, he may not indulge such presumption after the danger of collision becomes imminent,¹⁶ or where it appears that those in peril are unable to extricate themselves,¹⁷ and, if the person in charge of the animal or vehicle does not hear or heed the signal or warning, or it is otherwise apparent that a collision is likely to occur, it is the duty of the motorman to use all reasonable and practicable means within his power to avoid it,¹⁸ as by checking the speed of the car,¹⁹ and, if necessary, stopping altogether.²⁰

In the absence of statute or ordinance so requiring, the mere fact that a vehicle is headed toward an approaching car does not call for the sounding of gongs and the giving of warnings,²¹ until it is apparent that the driver is intent on going onto the track,²² or is obstructing the paramount rights of the streetcar.²³ However, an ordinance requiring the motorman of a streetcar to sound the gong when approaching vehicles is valid²⁴ and applies to all teams and carriages,²⁵ and especially to an automobile at a place other than at a regular street crossing,²⁶ and the violation of such an ordinance has been held negligence per se;²⁷ but failure to

Reciprocal care

A motor vehicle driver, observing streetcar approaching street crossing in distance, cannot recklessly drive on crossing in race with car, but is not arbitrarily required to stop and wait for its passage, but he and streetcar motorman are required only to exercise reasonable prudence to avoid injury and may go over crossing without being negligent, if they reasonably believe that crossing can be made safely.—Dunham v. Des Moines Ry. Co., 35 N.W.2d 578, 240 Iowa 421.

Dangerous intersection

(1) Streetcar motorman approaching dangerous intersection at which was located regular car stop at which people were standing would be required to exercise due diligence to discover whether automobiles coming from right on intersecting street had entered zone of imminent danger, or were about to do so.—Molkenbur v. St. Louis Public Service Co., 103 S.W.2d 560, 232 Mo.App. 256.

(2) In entering a dangerous intersection, the care required of a motor-man is that he have streetcar at such speed and under such control as to be able to avoid an accident with cross traffic if at all possible.—Gaines v. Philadelphia Transp. Co., 59 A.2d 916, 359 Pa. 610.

(3) At a dangerous public crossing, operator of trolley car, even though it has superior right of way, must exercise high degree of care toward persons reasonably to be expected to appear, such as motorists and other travelers.—Scholl v. Philadelphia Suburban Transp. Co., 51 A.2d 732, 356 Pa. 217.

No preëminent right

Streetcars have no absolute or preëminent right of way over intersections, but must use them with due regard to the safety and rights of the general public.—Vincent v. Los Angeles Transit Lines, 183 P.2d 713, 81 Cal.App.2d 195.

On making left turn

(1) Streetcar making left turn at intersection at which traffic was regulated by control signals had no greater right to use of the streets than an automobile would have had under the same circumstances, and it was motorman's duty to operate streetcar with due regard for rights and safety of others lawfully using the streets.—Indianapolis Rys. v. Boyd, 53 N.E.2d 762, 222 Ind. 481, rehearing denied 54 N.E.2d 272, 223 Ind. 481.

(2) Transit company was held liable for injuries sustained when motorist making left-hand turn at intersection was struck by transit company's trolley car.—Dowret v. Brooklyn & Queens Transit Corp., 288 N.Y.S. 43, 248 App.Div. 635, affirmed 7 N.E.2d 686, 273 N.Y. 548.

(3) Where automobile in which plaintiff was riding was in the intersection and driver had signaled his intention to make a left turn before approaching streetcar had entered the intersection, streetcar operator had statutory duty to yield the right of

§ 238. At or Approaching Street Intersections

While a motorman may assume that a driver of a vehicle at or approaching a street crossing will exercise due care, it is obligatory on the motorman to exercise due care, as by controlling his car at the proper speed, maintaining a lookout, and obeying traffic signals.

The rule that travelers on the street and operators of streetcars have equal rights at street intersections, discussed supra § 209, is applicable to accidents involving streetcars and other vehicles colliding at street intersections.³⁰ Accordingly, on approaching a street intersection, the motorman must use due care,³¹ and, likewise, on approaching way to automobile.—Scerca v. Philadelphia Transp. Co., 42 A.2d 593, 352 Pa. 152.

On making right turn

In action by motorist for damages to his automobile, which he had stopped at left of and about three feet from rear half of streetcar near intersection, and which was struck by the swinging overhang of the streetcar when it made a right turn while motorist was prevented from moving by automobile ahead of his automobile, court properly found that ordinary care required streetcar crew to observe traffic on its left before making the turn, to see that turn could be made in safety to other vehicles.—Charles P. Anderson, Inc. v. St. Paul City Ry. Co., 280 N.W. 3, 203 Minn. 119.

Ordinary care as sufficient

On meeting vehicles at street intersections, proper care on the part of the motorman is not "to do all he can to avoid a collision," but merely to exercise ordinary care.—Cincinnati Traction Co. v. Sanders, 32 Ohio Cir. Ct. 413.

Public and private crossings

(1) More care is required of trolley operator at public crossings than at private crossings.—Scholl v. Philadelphia Suburban Transp. Co., 51 A.2d 732, 356 Pa. 217.

(2) Operators of interurban cars crossing a private road must always exercise due care, to be determined by facts and circumstances.—Rosenberg v. Des Moines Ry. Co., 238 N.W. 703, 213 Iowa 152.

Running on private way

Fact that streetcar was running on private right of way on outskirts of city did not lessen duty of motorman on approaching highway crossing.—Schaeffer v. Reading Transit Co., 153 A. 323, 302 Pa. 220—Thompson v. Reading Transit Co., 100 Pa. Super. 294.

street intersection, must obey traffic signals,³² and make reasonable efforts to avoid a collision.³³ The mere operation of a car at a crossing in such a manner as to render it dangerous for a vehicle to cross in front of it is not negligence.³⁴ Where a motorman is confronted by a sudden and immediate danger, such as a runaway horse at a crossing, he is not required to do what, after mature deliberation, would have seemed to a prudent man to be the wisest thing to do under the circumstances;³⁵ but it has been held, in such case, that, if the motorman saw the horse and could have slowed down sufficiently to let it pass, it was his duty to do so,³⁶ and to stop the car, if it could be done in the exercise of ordinary care, in time to avoid injury.³⁷

in assuming that the driver of a vehicle will take ordinary care for his own safety,³⁸ and will stop before placing himself in a perilous position;³⁹ that the driver of the vehicle will not negligently drive in front of the streetcar;⁴⁰ that the driver will not illegally attempt to pass the streetcar turning onto a spur at an intersection;⁴¹ and that a motor vehicle approaching a crossing in full view of the car will stop before reaching the track,⁴² unless the conduct of the driver is such as should reasonably lead the motorman to apprehend the contrary,⁴³ as where the driver is oblivious to danger,⁴⁴ or is unable to stop or remove himself from peril.⁴⁵ However, it has been held that a motorman has no right to assume that a traveler will wait for the car to pass unless it is so near the crossing,⁴⁶ or its rate of speed so apparent,⁴⁷ that the traveler

Stopping in intersection

A motorman of a streetcar would be negligent if he stopped streetcar across paved portion of highway so as to force approaching truck to leave highway, or strike car, and was not negligent in failing to do so.—Lotta v. Kansas City Public Service Co., 117 S.W.2d 296, 342 Mo. 743.

At rural highway crossing

(1) Motorman of electric trolley on approaching rural highway crossing may presume that automobile driver will stop or turn aside until latter's conduct leads motorman to apprehend otherwise.—Cate v. Fresno Traction Co., 2 P.2d 364, 213 Cal. 190.

(2) Motorman on interurban electric car approaching grade crossing had right to assume that truck driver approaching crossing would stop in place of safety.—Brager v. Milwaukee Elec. Ry. & Light Co., 264 N.W. 733, 220 Wis. 65.

Taking of chances

A trolley car motorman was not required to anticipate danger which might attend chances taken by motorist in attempting to cross ahead of trolley car at highway grade crossing.—Mead v. Louer, 33 N.E.2d 534, 285 N.Y. 230.

Stop sign

The motorman of streetcar approaching street crossing had right to assume that driver of automobile, approaching crossing from right on intersecting street so far away and so slowly as to convey no intimation that he did not intend to stop, saw streetcar and would stop at intersection, until it appeared from circumstances that he was not going to stop, especially where there was stop sign on such street.—*Weishaar v. cannot reasonably expect to cross the street in safety.

Under an ordinance providing that "the driver of all vehicles" must look out for, and give way to, vehicles approaching simultaneously from their right at intersections, a streetcar motorman is not relieved from the duty to look out for an automobile approaching from his left.⁴⁸ The failure of a car to stop in front of a station on its way to the rear of the station to unload freight and baggage, in the course of which it collided with an automobile at a street crossing adjoining the station, has been held not to be a violation of an ordinance requiring cars to stop at stations.⁴⁹ A motorman may assume that, even though a motor vehicle enters an intersection before the streetcar, it will not violate an ordinance giving the streetcar precedence.⁵⁰

Care before starting. A motorman of a standing streetcar, at a street crossing, must use due care before starting to see that no vehicle is in dangerous proximity,⁵¹ and, if necessary, give warning, as discussed infra § 239, and, where he sees that an approaching vehicle is about to cross in front, he will be negligent in starting his car before waiting for it to cross.⁵² On the other hand, the motorman is not obligated to keep his car at a standstill until all visible traffic has crossed the intersection,⁵³ and, if at the time of starting his car he is justified in believing that moving cross traffic is at a safe distance from the intersection, he is entitled to proceed.⁵⁴

Control. A motorman should have his car under such control at a road intersection as the circumstances may reasonably require,⁵⁵ but is not required to bring his car under complete control whenever he sees in the distance a motor vehicle crossing the tracks,⁵⁶ and he need not keep his car under such control as will preclude a collision under any and all circumstances which may arise.⁵⁷

Lookout. It is the duty of a motorman approaching a street intersection to keep a proper lookout,⁵⁸ but, where it does not appear that the motorman saw, or in the exercise of reasonable care ought to have seen, a vehicle at a crossing, the railroad cannot be charged with negligence.⁵⁹ A motorman

Coming at twenty-five miles per hour
Where motorman started streetcar across intersecting street when truck was thirty-five feet from tracks, in full view and approaching at about twenty-five miles per hour, and there was nothing in the conduct of the truck driver in his approach to suggest to the motorman that he intended to stop at the crossing and wait for the streetcar to pass over the intersection, and delay of one second in starting streetcar would have averted collision, motorman in starting streetcar and colliding with truck was negligent.—Wright v. Vigilance

Operator of streetcar approaching street intersection must be vigilant in his watch for automobiles.—Aungst v. Central California Traction Co., 1 P.2d 56, 115 Cal.App. 113.—Bennett v. Central California Traction Co., 1 P.2d 47, 115 Cal.App. 1.

is not required to stop and look up and down the street he is crossing,⁶⁰ and a motorman need not keep a lookout for vehicles which may run into the rear of his car at a street intersection.⁶¹

Railroad crossing rules. Whether or not the rules applicable to railroad crossings, discussed in Railroads §§ 710-762, apply to collisions at an interurban railroad crossing has been the subject of some confusion due to the fact that an interurban railroad partakes of the character of a street railroad when its tracks are laid in the streets and of the nature of a railroad when its tracks are laid on its own private way.⁶² Where the tracks are laid in the streets, the strict rules of care enjoined on railroads in respect of crossings do not apply,⁶³ but, where the tracks are laid on private property, such rules do apply,⁶⁴ and the rights and duties of an interurban electric railroad in operating trains over a crossing in rural territory are similar to those of a company operating steam-propelled trains.⁶⁵ A law providing that every "railroad corporation" shall maintain cattle guards at road crossings applies to a street railroad.⁶⁶ The legal principles applicable to a crossing accident between a motor vehicle and a streetcar or train are determined by the physical surroundings and not by the motive power involved.⁶⁷

Speed. A motorman approaching a road intersection should proceed at a reasonable speed, and what constitutes a reasonable speed will depend on the surrounding circumstances.⁶⁸ The motorman must reduce speed if the circumstances indicate the necessity for so doing,⁶⁹ and he must slacken speed the moment it is apparent to him, in the exercise of ordinary care, that a warning is not going to be effective to prevent a collision.⁷⁰ It has also been held that, when approaching a crossing at an unlawful and negligent rate of speed, a motorman has no right to assume that a driver within eight feet of the track and moving at a speed of seven to ten miles an hour will not go thereon where there would have been no danger except for the motorman's negligence,⁷¹ and that, when running through a stop signal at a reckless and dangerous rate of speed, a motorman should not assume that automobiles can or will yield the right of way.⁷² On the other hand, a motorman is not necessarily under a duty to reduce the speed of the car on seeing an automobile in front of the car,⁷³ or whenever he sees an automobile approaching an intersection,⁷⁴ until the danger becomes imminent,⁷⁵ and it appears that the driver of a vehicle either will not or cannot extricate himself from danger.⁷⁶

will obey laws requiring him to reduce speed.⁷⁷ An ordinance regulating the speed of streetcars at intersections in congested districts is inapplicable to intersections in other districts.⁷⁸ Where a motorman runs a car at a rate of speed forbidden by an ordinance and rule of the company without giving the customary signals of approach at a street intersection, it is negligence on the part of such motorman, and the company is responsible therefor.⁷⁹ Where an eastbound car struck a vehicle thirty or forty feet west of a westbound car stopped at the northeast corner of an intersection for the purpose of letting off and taking on passengers, it was "about to pass" such car within the meaning of an ordinance prohibiting a car about to pass another car going in the opposite direction at a point where passengers may alight from, or board, it, from proceeding at more than three miles an hour.⁸⁰ The fact that an ordinance forbidding a vehicle to be driven through a procession is inapplicable to streetcars does not excuse a motorman from driving toward a procession at an unreasonable speed.⁸¹ Also, the fact that a streetcar was not exceeding the speed limit will not excuse negligent operation thereof.⁸²

It is not negligence per se to run an interurban electric car over an ordinary country highway crossing at fifty miles an hour or more,⁸³ and, where conditions at the crossing permit approaching motorists, in the exercise of reasonable care, to see the approach of the interurban, but they fail to look and a collision results, the fifty-mile an hour speed of the interurban is not actionable negligence.⁸⁴ On the other hand, operation of a streetcar on a public highway in which the company owns no exclusive right of way, at such a speed as to prevent its stopping before reaching a crossing has been held negligence per se.⁸⁵ An ordinance limiting the speed of railway trains cannot be applied to trains propelled by electricity with respect to a collision at a street crossing.⁸⁶

Violation of company rule relating to the spacing of cars was held to be evidence tending to show negligence where a car running immediately behind another collided with a wagon which was crossing the track at an intersection.⁸⁷

Where the circumstances so require, a motorman must give warning of the approach of the streetcar to an intersection.

The motorman of a streetcar may, in the exercise of due care, be required to give a proper warning by sounding the gong, or otherwise, when approaching a street crossing⁸⁸ or driveway,⁸⁹ but in the absence of statute or ordinance so requiring, a motorman is not obligated to signal merely by virtue of the fact that he is approaching a road intersection,⁹⁰ and, where the driver of a vehicle is aware of danger from the approach of the streetcar, failure of the motorman to sound his gong is ordinarily immaterial.⁹¹ On the other hand, a mo-
